Rationing of Oil If Needed; Nazis Slay War Prisoners; Textile Pay Raise Backed

The World's Day—August 15, 1942

Washington: Oil Rationing Due If Necessary

Oil, heating, and home insulating technicians completed a week of conferences with the Office of Price Administration in preparation for oil rationing if that proves necessary.

Leon Henderson, Price Administrator, appointed Robert W. Horton, Chief of the News Bureau of the Office of War Information, as Deputy OPA Administrator in charge of information and educational programs.

Passage of the tax bill in Congress before the end of September is expected by Senator Walter George (D) of Georgia, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee which completed public hearings and recessed until Aug. 24. [Details: Financial Page.]

Europe: French Prisoners Slain by Germans

Germans killed 96 out of 600 French war prisoners who refused to work at a camp at Stettin, according to the Moscow radio.

Vichy's Ambassador to Turkey, Jean Helou, has left for Syria, where it was expected that he would join the Fighting French.

Mainz in German Rhineland was described by the Neue Zürcher Zeitung's correspondent in Berlin as a city that "now belongs to the list of German cities which suffered great damage." Numerous buildings, including the Cathedral, were said to have been hit.

New England: Textile Pay Increases Approved

Wage increases approved in Washington for 61,000 New England Textile Workers. [Page 5.]

National: Salvaging of Normandie Expedited

Salvaging of the capsized Lafayette, formerly the Normandie, is well ahead of schedule in New York harbor. Already large quantities of steel and rubber have been recovered. Efforts will be made to use the hull again.

Food stamps, originally designed to help dispose of farm surpluses, are being used now to support prices at levels calculated to encourage production of key products, including butter and eggs, according to the Agricultural Marketing Administration.

Wayne Thomas, Aviation Editor of the Chicago Tribune, told reporters after coming out of Federal Grand Jury chambers that he had been questioned briefly about a Tribune article of June 7 allegedly disclosing secret Navy information.

Mars, 70-ton flying boat of the U. S. Navy, took the air for the first time during several weeks in a "routine" test of refinements in two of the four new type 2,000 horsepower motors.

India: Demonstrators Fired on in Calcutta

Eight demonstrators were wounded when police in Calcutta, ending a period of quiet, fired into a crowd of demonstrators. The crowd had stopped street car service and cut telephone wires.

Labor: Bayonne Plant Reopens After Strike

Wheels rolled again in the Bayonne, N. J., plant of General Cable Corporation, but a Navy spokesman indicated that wildcat strikers could not expect to benefit at management's expense by forcing the Government to intervene in strikes.

Wage increases of 5 cents an hour for 225,000 General Motors Corporation employees were recommended by the majority of a War Labor Board panel.

Textile workers would receive a rise of 7½ cents an hour under a War Labor Board recommendation affecting 61,000 factory hands in North and South.

Americas: Trend From Axis Seen in Chile

Chile was seen veering toward a break with the Axis as President Rios officially accepted an invitation to visit the United States, probably in mid-October. High military, naval, and diplomatic figures will accompany him in a special plane.

Gen. Lazaro Cardenas, Mexico's commander on the Pacific Coast, exposed and denied propaganda rumors that Mexican troops would be sent out of the country.

Charter: London Papers in Belated Comment

Three London newspapers belatedly took editorial notice of the first anniversary yesterday of the signing of the Atlantic Charter. They stressed the fact that the hardest part of the struggle was yet to come and that it would be a long way to victory.

The War:

Latest developments on the world's battlefronts are summarized on Page 1 in Column 8.

'Individualist Group' of Britons

LONDON, Aug. 15 (P)—Twenty-nine well-known Britons—peers, industrialists and writers—have organized an "individualist group" to advance their desires for fewer Government restraints on individual liberties.

The group is headed by Sir Ernest J. P. Benn, publisher and political writer, and includes the playwright-critic, St. John Ervine. In its manifesto, issued yesterday, the "individualist group" said it "consists of members of different political parties who are united in the desire to restore to British public life that spirit of individual liberty and responsibility which characterized its period of greatness and which is today gravely threatened."

Harvard in War To Full Scope Of Resources

Nearly 3,000 men in uniform can be seen in yard—members of faculty at Washington

By William B. Frye

Harvard's venerable Yard is once again ringing to songs of marching men as America's oldest university plunges all-out into war activity.

On a scale never before disclosed to be so vast and far-reaching, war is working a transformation in Harvard life and gearing the resources of education to vital military objectives.

It is not a matter of training men, although nearly 3,000 uniforms may be seen in the Yard today.

It is not merely the sending of professors to Washington, although 300 are helping plan a world-wide war.

It is not merely new buildings, and sacrifice of old; nor the use of physics and chemical laboratories for secret research; nor the speeding of classes and the 12-month program, which 70 per cent of the undergraduates are taking; nor new courses in Russian, Japanese, and camouflage.

It's the spirit of Harvard that is transformed.

Marching under the Yard elms, the "singing statisticians"—members of the Army Air Corps studying at the Business School—join in a chorus to keep in step:

Off we go—into the wild blue yonder.

Climbing high—into the sun; Here they come—zooming to meet our thunder.

At 'em, boys, give 'em the gun!

Snapping into line, the officers in the Navy Communications School, whose commanders have moved into the home of Dr. James B. Conant, Harvard President, march to classes every morning to the tune of "Anchors Aweigh" and other songs played over loudspeakers and echoing through the Yard.

Out on the grass of Soldiers Field, where inter-House athletics once were played, the Army Quartermaster Corps students learn to roll 60-pound packs so tightly they will stay together on a double-quick march.

Even the regular Harvard undergraduates, of which there are 2,500 this summer, catch the spirit. A group of about 60 go out behind the Business School three afternoons a week into a rough, marshy field, and there practice guerrilla warfare.

Take a quick tour around the Yard and near-by Harvard grounds. Starting down by the Business School, south of the Charles River, where more than 1,800 Army and Navy men are studying, you see Carpenter Hall, a new red-and-gray building used as classroom for the Navy Supply Corps School.

The Supply Corps, you learn, will be expanded to 600 men on Aug. 31, and a new mess hall will be built to feed them all just back of Morgan Hall. It will cut into ground now used for tennis courts. Also in the Business School, first institution in the country, according to Assistant Dean Philip Hofer, to gear itself to the war effort, are the following units:

1. The "singing statisticians," a secret number of Air Corps men being trained to match, and surpass, for America, the widely hailed German skill in organization of blitz warfare. Exactly what their duties will be when commissioned as second lieutenants cannot be disclosed, but it is announced that they will supply Air Corps officers "from the lowest squadron commander to the highest commanding general."

U.S. Tightening Grip on Solomons; German Wedge Imperils Stalingrad; Air Raids Found Sapping Nazi Morale

Recent visitors report Germany is uneasy as U. S. Air Force joins RAF in raids.

By Derek Patmore

Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

ISTANBUL, Turkey, Aug. 15—The appearance of the American Army Air Force on the Western Front as a separate organization to support the Royal Air Force, coupled with the approach of longer nights for raiding, is having a marked effect on German morale. According to travelers just arrived here from Germany, Berlin is feeling particularly uneasy on the prospects for the approaching fall. One traveler who visited Lübeck after the RAF raid in March, reported that for days fires were still burning. He reported that the entire town was in ruins and that the St. Laurent Nord district suffered most. All Gothic churches were destroyed and the big St. Gertrud barracks were completely gutted. All of Lübeck's food stores were burned and the population had to be fed with food sent from Hamburg.

Terribly Effective

Another traveler who was present during a recent RAF raid on Hamburg declared that raid was "terribly" effective. One big anti-aircraft cement tower when hit was sheltering 2,000 persons, many of whom were killed, he declared.

These travelers confirm all earlier reports of equally disastrous raids on Cologne. The fact that the RAF put the city's waterworks out of action for a week added greatly to the sufferings of the population. After this raid, special SS and SA troops were drafted to go to Cologne and maintain order. The Government, at the beginning of the heavy raids, started to evacuate the population from the bombed cities, but as the raids continued acute gasoline and transport shortage made further evacuations impossible.

In Berlin, there is a good deal of tension owing to the presence of thousands of emigrants from bombed towns who have spread reports of terrible bombings and have made Berlin the most overcrowded city in Germany.

The food shortage in Germany, it is stated, has reached an acute stage. Rations again have been cut by 25 per cent and conditions of prisoners of war are reported to be terrible, although the authorities

Maine to Launch Eight Ships As Single Day's War Gesture

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

PORTLAND, Maine, Aug. 15—This famous seaport city, together with the city of Bath on the Kennebec River, was preparing today for the biggest event in the modern history of shipbuilding in the Pine Tree State—the launching tomorrow of eight ships to be used in the United Nations' battle against the Axis.

Six of the ships will be launched from affiliates of the Todd Shipyard Corporation and the Bath Iron Works, Inc. At South Portland, the Todd-Bath Iron Shipbuilding Corporation will launch five cargo carriers of 10,000 tons each for the British Ministry of Shipping. At the near-by South Portland Shipbuilding Corporation, one Liberty Ship of 10,500 tons will be launched for the United States Maritime Commission.

Refugees From Nazis 'Find' Selves in Britain

By E. Berg Holt

Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

LONDON, Aug. 15—A tour of various parts of England and Scotland shows that, after various difficulties and vicissitudes, those civilians (women as well as men) who fled to the safety of England from Hitlerist Europe are at last settling down to a useful and happy life of work for the common victory.

At first the newcomers not only found themselves in strange surroundings, but unless they were in one or other of the armed services or the mercantile marine, their hopes of suitable work were often frustrated. At first manual labor in the Pioneer Corps was generally the only employment for skilled and delicate fingers; the ranks of the professions and trades were tightly closed so that thousands of potentially useful war workers had to stay in enforced and bitter idleness.

Suspicion Is Lessening

Today comparatively few of the allied nationals are without suitable occupations. Some have trained and are training English workers, women as well as men, to handle industries which were previously unknown in Great Britain, others are working side by side with their English comrades, under English or other United Nations management.

It would be untrue to say there is no friction. But, on the whole, it is comparatively small. Some continental workers—Belgian and Polish for example—complain that "they had to work harder at home." Some British employers and some British workmen still view the foreigner in their midst with suspicion.

It was in Maine that Capt. George Popham, nephew of England's Lord Chief Justice, floated the first ship built in America—the Virginia, started in 1607.

The five cargo ships built for Great Britain will be hauled by tugs from huge, flooded "sunken basins"—the most modern departure in shipbuilding—at the yard of the Todd-Bath Iron Shipbuilding Corp. in South Portland. The sixth freighter, the Liberty

Washington says drive is prelude to 'rolling back' Japanese from conquered lands.

By Joseph G. Harrison

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15—The American offensive in the Solomon Islands, officially admitted to be the prelude to a "rolling back" of the Japanese from all conquered territory, appeared to be gaining in momentum today, on the basis of both public and private reports from the Navy Department.

America's land-sea-air forces apparently are meeting with a large measure of success in consolidating and expanding their positions on land, bringing up supplies and reinforcements in sizable quantity, and interfering with Japanese attempts to strengthen weakening enemy defenses.

According to highly reliable sources in close touch with the fighting, the situation is more favorable to the Allies than has been admitted in the terse and moderate Navy Department communiqués. In certain sections of the fighting, at least, American losses are believed to have been measurably less than were anticipated despite the ferocity of both the attack and the defense.

In today's short communiqué, the Navy permits itself to say that "the task of consolidating the shore positions now held by the United States Marines in the Solomon Islands is progressing satisfactorily." Although this may appear as only a routine statement, the use of the word "satisfactorily" is significant since the Navy uses it only on rare occasions and when it is fully justified.

Enemy Bases Under Fire

Similarly, official word states that the task of protecting America's lines of supply and communication is well in hand and that enemy bases and ships are being subjected to a continuous attack.

In view of the American air offensive, which is operating over a 2,000-mile front, and the lack of any evidence that Japanese planes are striking back with comparable vigor, it would appear that American planes achieved aerial superiority in the opening phase of the Solomon Islands battle and have held it ever since.

Nevertheless, informed commentators here are unanimous in warning that the battle for the strategically placed islands is far from over and that the enemy apparently is determined to fight it out in this sector with all available reinforcements. There is reason to believe the fighting may continue for weeks.

There is, however, evidence here that Washington will welcome a showdown in this area, since the fight will be in a place of America's choosing. It is now known that American strategy in the Solomon Islands has envisaged not only their capture but also the enticing of a part of the Japanese Fleet into a knockdown, drag-out battle.

Proof of the success with which the American attack was launched came from the Axis itself in a Berlin broadcast in which Tokyo admitted that when the Japanese first sighted the Americans on Aug. 7 the latter already were landing

Nazi breakthrough on Volga Front increases danger of all Soviet defense forces.

By the War Editor of The Christian Science Monitor

Drawn from dispatches of the Associated Press and other sources

United States Marines apparently made new gains in consolidating beach heads in the Solomon Islands. But in Europe, a new series of Nazi breakthroughs seriously intensified the danger to all of Southern Russia.

Encouraging news continued to emanate from the Southwest Pacific. Navy Department reports from Washington and from General MacArthur's headquarters in Australia indicated that not only were the three previously established beach heads on the Solomon Islands being expanded, but that reinforcements and supplies were being landed smoothly to United States forces already operating. This, together with announcement that a Japanese convoy had been intercepted and attacked by Allied warplanes, indicated the United Nations may have established air superiority over this area.

But even the import of these United Nations' gains appeared small against the backdrop of the far more significant new Russian reverses, and the consequences which would accrue if German armies continue their present unchecked advance.

Russian dispatches admitted that the Germans had broken through at Kotelnikovsky, southwest of Stalingrad, and that they also had pierced Russian lines south of Kletskaia in the Don River bend region. Moscow further admitted that the Germans had crossed the Kuban River at Krasnodar, and Berlin claimed capture of Georgievsk, 120 miles northwest of the rich Grozny oil fields.

The breakthrough at Kotelnikovsky threw into sharp relief the danger facing Astrakhan, at the mouth of the Volga, one of Russia's chief food sources and key to the northern Caspian Sea as well as the main Allied supply route from the Persian Gulf. Although Kotelnikovsky is 245 miles from Astrakhan, the Nazis earlier had claimed capture of Eliista which lies only 160 miles to the west. If this supply route were to be intercepted there would be left little more than the Murmansk route which itself is severely hampered by Nazi sea attacks.

Although the action in the Pacific serves as an important, though hardly decisive, diversion for the Russian Front, in Europe there appears at present little other action which would divert and sap the power of the Nazi thrust on Russia. No RAF raids were reported over Germany during the night, in fact, the Germans themselves were over East Anglia and dropped what the British admitted to be thousands of incendiary bombs.

The battle for Egypt, which once loomed as a diversion for the Russian Front, was completely dormant except for sporadic air raids on Axis positions in which American and British air men cooperated.

A British naval bombardment of the Italian island of Rhodes in the Eastern Mediterranean—a damaging attack which, however, lasted for only 12 minutes—demonstrated that the Royal Navy held power in the eastern end of the sea, if not in the western end where the Axis attack during the past week on a convoy bound for Malta caused heavy damage to the British.

Solomons Held:

Marines Strengthen Grip Upon Islands

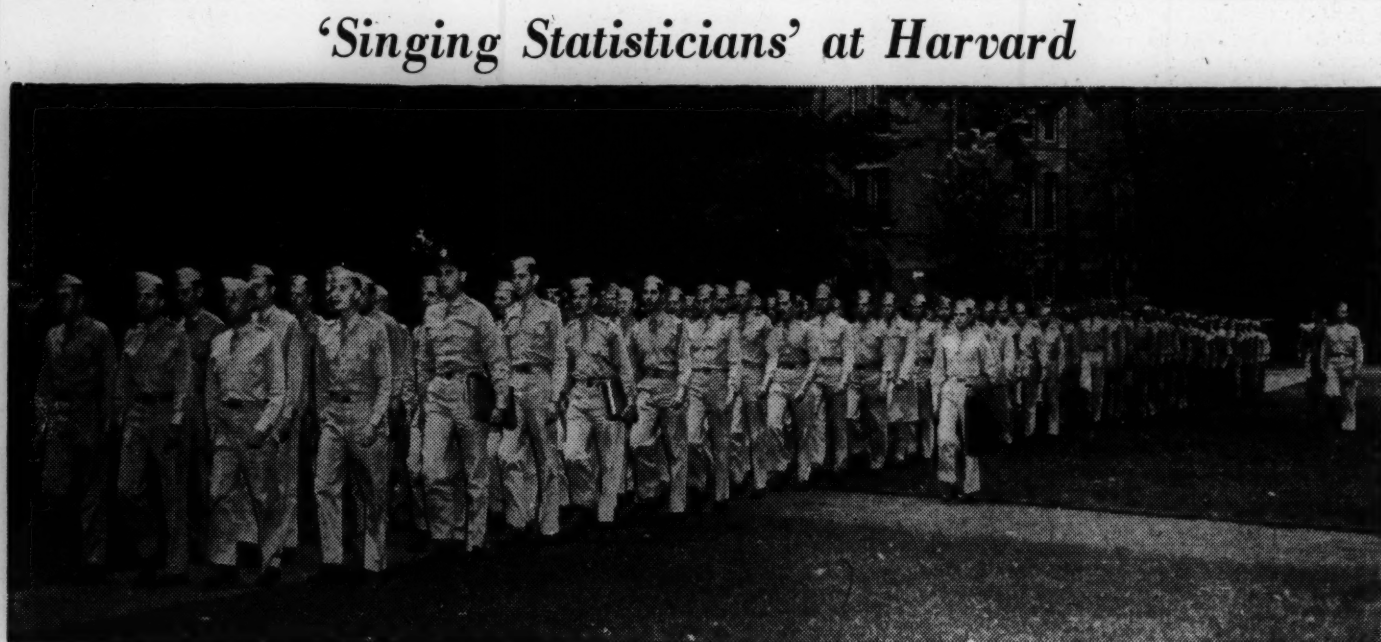

United States Marines, supported by strong air and naval forces, were reported to have forced back sufficient Japanese defenders today to clamp a firm hold upon the strategic Solomon Islands.

As bombers of Gen. Douglas MacArthur's Australian headquarters pounded at attempted enemy reinforcements, American fighting men were "progressing satisfactorily," the Navy announced Friday night, in consolidating hard-won beach heads.

The terse Navy communiqué on the first big offensive of the United States and the United Nations gave only barest details. But it left little doubt that they were winning the early rounds of a conflict that, if successful, may lead eventually to an assault upon Japan itself.

With the Marines still in the thick of combat, Flying Fortresses

Army Aviation Cadets Marching Through Yard at University in Cambridge

Officer cadets of the Army Air Force Statistics School at Harvard University are shown as they march singing through the Yard. Stationed at the Business School, they have gained the nickname "singing statisticians" for the way they march to sing with music. These are a few of the nearly 3,000 men in uniform now to be seen in Harvard Yard.

3,000 Men in Uniform in Harvard Yard Give Picture of All-Out War Effort

Cambridge. Hollis Hall was used as barracks for Continental troops who fought in the Revolutionary War. Center: This is the Navy's mess hall now—but it used to be the Harvard Freshman Union. Here

"Yardlings" ate, played, and studied during their first year's stay at the college. Communications officers are shown coming out of the hall following a meal. Right: Cadets of the Army Quartermaster Corps eral" with "vital facts concerning status of aircraft, personnel, operations, and supply for tactical use." This statistical school opened in June.

2. The Army Quartermaster Corps, numbering approximately 400, who take a 16-month course in the techniques of feeding, clothing, and transporting Army troops. This school dates from early 1941.

3. A total of 1,100 nonuniformed students who pledge themselves to seek a military or naval commission upon graduation or take a proffered war-industry job. Most of the 1,100 are taking a 12-month accelerated course for a certificate as "Industrial Administrator."

Crossing the Lars Anderson

Bridge to the region of the river-side Houses, you learn that Harvard's regular students, crowded by all the new men in uniform, are doubling up in the formerly roomy suites until some are sleeping on upper and lower bunks. Freshmen have joined upperclassmen in the House rooms. They had to—the Navy took over half of their Yard dormitories and all of their eating place, the Harvard Union.

In the Yard, the Navy reigns supreme. Dr. Conant's house has been stripped of its rich furnishings and made into an office. Desks for officers of the Communications School are in the parlor, the reception room, and even the pantry. Dr. Conant has moved to near-by Dana-Palmer House, first Harvard astronomical observatory. This school, for future radio of-icers, opened July 1 and now has 750 men. It will soon be expanded to 1,000. Many of the bluejackets live in Hollis Hall, where in the Revolutionary War, Continental troops were quartered.

North of the Yard, in Perkins Hall where Law School students once lived—there are only 180 law men now, compared with a peacetime 1,500—Army chaplains are quartered, in the Country's only school for these religious leaders. There are now 141 such chaplains, but it is expected that there will be 500 trained every month before long.

That's not all. Over in the Cruft Physical Laboratory, big, red-brick, sprawling structure, 523 Army and Navy officers are studying electronics—the art of radio detecting of enemy aircraft.

Next door, in the Engineering School, 25 Army engineers are learning methods of controlling the soil for airport construction. Their job is to make the airports "no muddier than they have to be."

There is many another small unit which may be found in basements or sub-basements of Harvard's imposing buildings. In the Littauer School of Public Administration, for example, one of the electronics laboratories is run in strictest secrecy. In Morgan Hall, at the Business School, a "fatigue laboratory" puts men through the heat of a desert, the cold of Russia, and the rarefied atmosphere of high flight to see what equipment they will need and how they will react.

Regular undergrads compete for the privilege of naval or military Reserve Officers Training Corps instruction. In the Army reserve, 550 cadets will be accepted this fall for field artillery training. They come out second lieutenants. In the naval branch, 280 men will be accepted. They emerge as ensigns.

The totals are impressive—approximately 2,800 men now in uniform; over 4,000 expected to be shortly.

For other students, the Navy's V-1 is available; also, the Army Enlisted Reserve Corps and Army Air Force Enlisted Reserve Corps.

Compulsory physical training for all men, not just freshmen, is instituted in a "toughening-up process."

Heading the list of prominent Harvard officials aiding the United States Government is Dr. Conant, who was recently appointed to a three-man committee to study the rubber-supply problem and get exact figures for President Roosevelt.

James M. Landis, Dean of the Law School, is National Director of Civilian Defense. Government professor William Y. Elliott is Chief of the Stockpiling and Shipping Imports Branch of the War Production Board. History Professor Samuel Eliot Morison, now Lieutenant Commander, is commissioned to write an official history of American naval operations in the war.

In his address to the Harvard Alumni Association this commencement, Dr. Conant outlined the objective of Harvard's all-out war program. "Education and scholarship as usual is no slogan for these days," he said.

"To speed the day when the Axis powers surrender without condition, we now devote the resources of this ancient society of scholars. To speed the day when we can walk once more in the full sunlight of human liberty, we stand ready to make whatever sacrifice is required."

Gladiolus Theme on 'Wedding' At Show Opening on Aug. 19

It will be a great day for the "bride and groom" when the New England Gladiolus Society opens its twenty-third annual exhibition in Massachusetts Horticultural Hall, Aug. 19, for the whole theme of the colorful displays will center on "the wedding."

Men in uniform will find themselves presented with corsages made from gladiolus by the New England Gladiolus Society, to be presented in turn to their young lady companions. The corsages will be made in one of the show-rooms where visitors can watch them in production.

The exhibition, finest of its kind in New England, will pivot around a variety of arrangement classes, with several open to public competition on each of the two day sessions, Aug. 19 and 20.

The public competitions will follow the theme of the exhibition, calling for "bride's bouquet; bridesmaids' bouquet; boutonniere." At the same time, many of the outstanding blue ribbon winners of previous years have agreed to enter the new competitions.

Added to the many trophies available for this exhibition, there will be a new trophy for the best entry in the novice section. This is the Peter Robertson Trophy, offered by Mr. Robertson of Lexington who for many years has been a blue ribbon winner in the annual showings at the Hall.

The exhibition is attracting its usual distant clientele, including entries from Mrs. Robert E. White of Waterloo, Iowa, and Clarence D. Fortnam of Tyler Hill, Penn. Mrs. White's specimens are arriving in special containers by rail, while Mr. Fortnam is planning to bring the exhibition in person, bringing his entries with him.

Mr. Fortnam is an enthusiastic amateur grower who belongs to 26 gladiolus societies and has already shipped entries to 12 shows this year, the longest of his shipments going to the Washington State show at Tacoma. The 12 exhibitors he has entered have been in 11 different States and in the Province of Quebec.

Legion of Valor Members Coming

Men who for 25 years have been winning the nation's highest awards for valor on the field of battle will come to Boston tomorrow for a four-day convention to relieve moments of selfless service in the interests of their country that have made them members of the national Legion of Valor.

Joining the ranks of these heroes this year are such men as John D. Bulkeley and James H. Doolittle, the latter winning the Distinguished Service Cross for his bombing of Japan.

Other awards to be represented are the Congressional Medal of Honor, the Navy Medal of Honor, and the Navy Cross, some of them being worn this year by men in uniform who have returned to military service after years in retirement.

Tomorrow's opening sessions at the Hotel Statler will include a welcoming of members, followed by memorial services at the Parkman Bandstand on Boston Common. Mayor Maurice J. Tobin will address the delegates in Faneuil Hall Aug. 17. The convention will end Aug. 19.

Stolen: 6 Million In 'Gas' Mileage

State Office of Price Administration enforcement officials today told of the theft of 524 "A" books, 570 "C" books, and an undetermined number of "B" books from the office of the South Boston Rationing Board early this morning. These books represent a total of nearly 6,000,000 miles of driving.

The theft was reported by Morgan T. Ryan, Administrator of the Boston Board, Boston police, State police, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation were immediately notified, and serial numbers of the books were broadcast throughout the State.

All police officials of Massachusetts were asked to be on guard against attempted sale of the missing books.

Kunze Claims Molzahn Had No Plot Part

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 15 (P)—Gerhard Wilhelm Kunze, confessed member of a spy ring, claims that the Rev. Kurt E. B. Molzahn played no part in a plot to hand over American military secrets to the Axis, an assertion that brought from the prosecution accusations that the former Bund "Führer" is a Nazi who has hated America from boyhood.

Kunze, underwent a relentless cross-examination after testifying for the defense during which Prosecutor Thomas J. Dodd, Jr., charged him with attempting to "exculpate" the stocky, Philadelphia Lutheran pastor "because you have been ordered to."

The former national Bund leader, awaiting punishment under the espionage conspiracy indictment on which the Rev. Mr. Molzahn has been on trial during the past three weeks, denied the prosecutor's allegations and occasionally laughed at some of the charges.

The prosecutor accused Kunze of planning, while in Mexico earlier this year, "a rendezvous with Nazi submarines that have been taking such a terrible toll of lives up and down our coast," but the witness calmly insisted he intended to sail to Europe in a 26-foot boat he had ready when Mexican police arrested him late in June.

The Government charges that Kunze was attempting to flee abroad with military secrets collected in this country when he was apprehended.

Fire Hazards on Waterfront Vanish Under Safety Drive

Log of the Port of Boston

Old, dilapidated piers and structures, long recognized as fire hazards, are rapidly disappearing along the Boston waterfront, as part of the port protection campaign of the Coast Guard. This grows out of the recent federal order giving power to the Captain of the Port to enforce measures to protect vessels, harbors, ports and waterfront facilities.

Port groups hail the work as the greatest progress along that line that has been made during years of peacetime effort. Unsightly hulks of once proud clipper ships that clutter up some sections of the upper harbor waterfront, which have defied efforts to have them broken up or removed, may succumb before the present vigorous program of prevention of sabotage and fire.

Two new fireboats have been put into service at this port by the Coast Guard and seven more for the general vicinity are scheduled to be added soon. A joint Government-civilian committee, recently established at the request of the Coast Guard, is already proving its value and efficiency, according to shipping men and port interests.

Acting on the theory that the cleaner a port is, the less danger exists of fire or sabotage the new group—known as the Boston Waterfront Advisory Committee—has appointed several subcommittees, one of which is specifically charged with working for port cleanliness. This is the Committee on Demolition or Removal of Abandoned Piers, Structures and Hulks, of which Andrew F. Lane of the Boston Port Authority Staff is chairman.

A list of all property along the strategic waterfront has been compiled, describing in detail each parcel of real estate. Where action is found to be necessary, the committee studies ways and means of cleaning it up and submits recommendations to the general committee, of which Richard Parkhurst, Chairman of the Boston Port Authority, is chairman. Cooperation of the Coast Guard and the Boston Fire Department is proving of inestimable value, committee members declare.

Evidence of the closely interwoven relations of the new committee with the Coast Guard is seen in the fact that Commander Frank M. Meals, Coast Guard Captain of the Port, has been named a member ex-officio of each subcommittee, permitting him to sit in on every discussion.

Captain Wilfrid N. Derby, District Coast Guard Officer of the First Naval District, is notified of each committee meeting by the chairman of the subcommittee, the better to co-ordinate and supplement the activities of both Coast Guard and committee.

Subcommittees, the appointment of which was made public today, and their respective chairmen, in addition to that for demolition of old structures, follow: Waterfront Fire Protection, headed by Chief Samuel Pope of the Boston Fire Department; Pier Patrols, Police and Watchmen, Capt. Lawrence H. Dunn, harbor master; Guarding Bridges and Bridge Approaches, George G. Hyland, Boston Commissioner of Public Works; Passes, Permits, and Identification, Arthur Long, Deputy Collector of Customs.

Eight Ships to Be Launched Tomorrow

Ship Ethan Allen, will slide down the ways at the Maritime Commission's adjacent South Portland Shipbuilding Corporation.

Two years ago there were just six employees on the pay rolls of the Todd-Bath and South Portland concerns. Today, more than 26,000 labor in the bustling plants to rush to completion the vessels so urgently needed for carrying the war to the enemy.

Two years ago, the mile-long site occupied by the two yards across the harbor from Portland was mostly marshland and fields. To make way for the giant structures, the builders had only to clear a few homes, several small sardine canneries and the almost forgotten shambles of a decrepit plant where wooden ships once took shape.

Three of the five "ugly duckling" freighters have been built in one basin and two in another. Opened flood gates permit the tide to float the vessels which are towed out to fitting piers. The gates are then closed as the tide recedes, water pumped from the berths, and keels laid for other ships.

Sponsors Named

The five ships for Britain and their sponsors are: Ocean Wayfarer, Mrs. Ralph O. Brewster, wife of Maine's junior Senator; Ocean Stranger, Mrs. Harley M. Kilgore, wife of the Senior Senator from Maine; Ocean Traveller, Mrs. Joseph Haas, Jr., wife of a Vice-President of the Todd Shipyard Corporation; Ocean Seaman, Mrs. Alexander Symon, wife of a Director of the British Ministry of Shipping, Washington, D. C.; Ocean Gallant, Mrs. Peter V. O. Evans, wife of a Director of the British Ministry of Shipping, Portland, Maine.

Mrs. Harvey D. Gibson of New York, wife of an officer of the Manufacturers Trust Company of New York, will sponsor the Liberty Ship Ethan Allen.

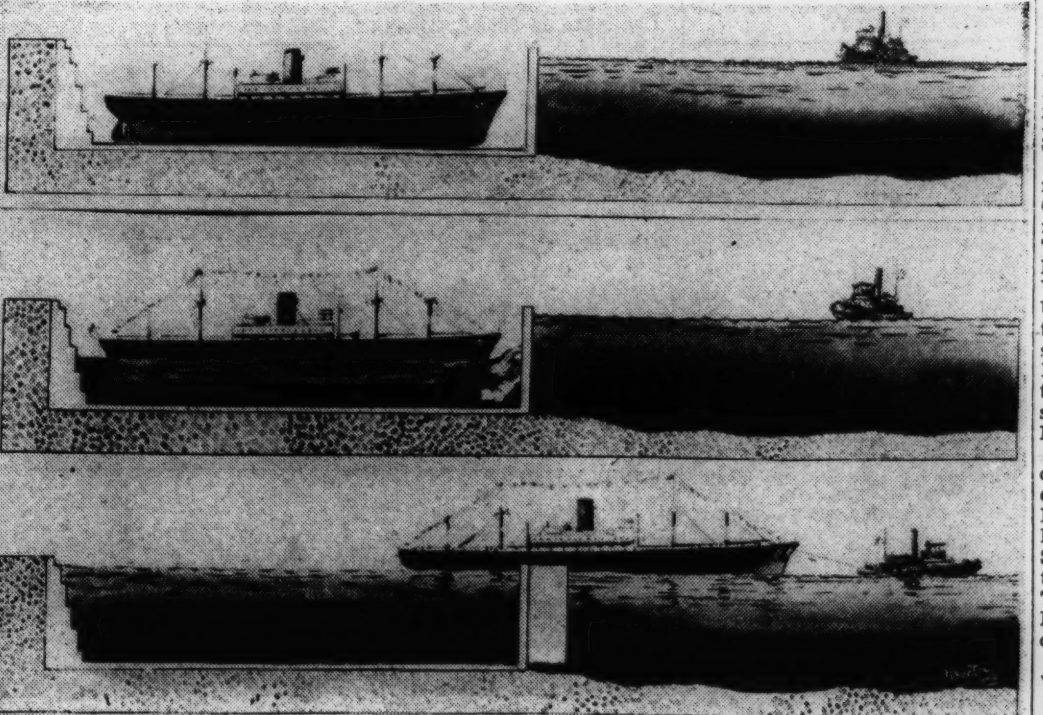

The two destroyers will be named U. S. S. Cony and U. S. S. Cony after two State of Maine naval heroes of an earlier day. The Cony will be sponsored by Mrs. Frank E. Beatty of Arlington, Va., wife of Capt. Frank E. Beatty, U. S. N., aide to the Secretary of the Navy. The Cony will be sponsored by Mrs. William R. Sleight of Eastport, Maine, a first cousin, twice removed, from the late Joseph S. Cony, Acting Master U. S. N., after whom the ship is named.

Joining William S. Newell, one of the nation's foremost shipbuilders and guiding hand of the three Maine shipyards, at the Portland launchings, will be Admiral Emory S. Land, Chairman of the Maritime Commission, Senator Harry S. Truman of Missouri, Senator Brewster, and Gov. Sumner Sewall of Maine.

Work Halted in Walkout At Fall River Woolen Mill

FALL RIVER, Mass., Aug. 14 (P)—Production at the River Mills, woolen yarn manufacturers, temporarily halted today when a majority of the 300 employees walked out in protest over failure to reach an agreement on proposed wage increases.

American Ingenuity in Launching

Maine Ships Get Modern Start Toward Career

Five of the eight ships to be launched in Maine tomorrow will be towed from sunken basins in the manner shown above. This revolutionary method was used for the first time in 1939 at the Todd-Bath plant in South Portland where tomorrow's launchings will occur. The basins, which are nearly 500 feet long and 18 feet deep, are closed off from tidewater by heavy iron gates, and the ships are constructed in a horizontal position. When ready for launching, valves are opened and water from the bay flows in. When the water reaches the height of tidewater the gates are removed and a tug hooks onto the ship and tows it to a fitting-out dock.

Columbia to Train Civilians For Postwar Administration

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—An intensive civilian training of personnel to administer territories which may be liberated or occupied by United Nations troops will begin at Columbia University on Aug. 17 with the opening of a 48-week course in "International Administration," set up after consultation with departments and agencies of the United States Government.

With a number of Federal agencies and private war relief organizations contributing instructors or students or both to the program, Columbia University is looking ahead to the days when American and allied troops will drive the Axis from Europe's conquered countries and occupy Germany itself. At that moment, it is felt, there will be immense need for trained personnel to arrange feeding programs, install civil government, rehabilitate shattered economies and in general bind up the war wounds.

In what is believed to be the first educational program of its kind, Columbia is ready to train Americans for realistic administration of foreign lands, but the objectives will be a far cry from imperialism and a still farther cry from the instruction accorded potential Japanese and Nazi administrators trained in systematic looting.

Under War Department

Last April, the War Department inaugurated a School of Military Government to instruct its officers in international administration. With general Federal approval, but without official sponsorship, Columbia has installed a civilian program which will prepare personnel to work in conjunction with the military, when and possibly before the fighting stops. Forty-nine enrollees, possessing draft-exempt status of one form or another, have been registered, including a contingent from the Navy.

The faculty for the unique venture will include Columbia University professors, Government and one-time Government officials, among them men with experience

The Ramparts We Watch

New Jersey Senatorial Primary Entered by Seven Republicans

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 15.—There will be seven candidates competing for Republican senatorial nomination in this State, the winner to oppose United States Senator William H. Smathers, (D) incumbent, in November. Just before the deadline, Gill Robb Wilson, State Aviation Director, filed his nominating petition, following filing by Albert W. Hawkes, Montclair industrialist; Joseph A. Bower, Montclair banker; Harry M. Machette, of Belleville; Franklin Kleib of Maplewood; George O. Pullen of Trenton, and George H. Biehl of Teaneck.

In the face of this array of candidates, Wheeler McMillen of Hopewell, agricultural farm journal editor, mentioned as a potential candidate, has dropped out of the race, issuing a statement saying that he had decided it was best not to further complicate the Republican situation.

County leaders have now started taking sides in the contests despite the efforts of some State leaders to hold back from declaring themselves. Indications today, however, are that most of the county organizations would take a definite stand before the Sept. 15 primary.

Contest for Leadership

State Senator John Schroeder's wing of the Bergen County organization has declared for Mr. Hawkes while the wing led by Mrs. Edna R. Conklin, onetime national committeewoman, is supporting Mr. Bower. Mr. Schroeder is in a contest with Mrs. Conklin for the Bergen County leadership.

Mr. Schroeder's support of Mr. Hawkes brought immediate reaction from the Essex County Clean Government organization and an announcement by one of the lieutenants of Arthur T. Vanderbilt, Essex Republican leader, who is now in Maine, that the organization would go all the way in support of Mr. Wilson. Also lined up for Mr. Wilson are Lloyd B. Marsh, head of the Passaic County organization; State Senator Herbert J. Pascoe, leader of the Union County machine; William S. Birden, Mercer County chairman, and William E. Sevall, Hudson County Superintendent of Elections.

E. Bertram Mott, Morris County chairman, favors Mr. Hawkes, but Wilson backers are trying to break into the Mott organization.

Mr. Hawkes also has support from William I. Leonard, Jr., Burlington County chairman, but a leadership fight now on in Burlington is expected to be a major factor in the primary there.

In South Jersey

South Jersey Republicans have thus far taken no position in the Senate contests, but Thomas A. Mathis of Ocean County, and I. Grant Scott, State Senate President, are reported to favor Mr. Wilson, and Robert C. Hendrickson, State Treasurer and Gloucester County leader, is out in the open for Mr. Wilson.

The contests for two seats in the House of Representatives made vacant by the decision of the Republican incumbents to enter the Army at the close of their terms gave additional zest to Garden State politics. In the Ninth Congressional District, now represented by Frank C. Osmer, four Republicans and one Democrat have filed, and in the Eleventh district, now represented by Albert L. Vreeland of East Orange, five Republicans and one Democrat are in the lists; in the Seventh, represented by J. Parnell Thomas, a member of the Dies committee, one lone Democrat has filed, and in the Second district, represented by Elmer H. Wene, Maj.-Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, chief of the United States Army Air Force in World War I, has announced his candidacy with the promise of support by a group of party leaders in the district.

Rains Worth Millions in Power

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (AP)—Government power experts estimated that rainfall had contributed about $100,000,000 to the nation's war effort in the last few weeks.

The Geological Survey reported that, in contrast with the drought that menaced the output of aluminum for fighting planes a year ago, especially in the Southeast, heavy rains had filled many of the nation's great hydro-reservoirs to overflowing.

"Why, in one night," one power official said, "at least $1,000,000 worth of rain in terms of power has fallen in the Tennessee Valley alone."

The Geological Survey said the water artificially stored to produce

Historic Paintings of Early Americans Shown in Display of Fire Engine Panels

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 15.—Fire engines were fancy affairs in the 1800s, adorned not only with gilt lettering, but with historic paintings done by early American artists, if one may judge by an exhibit now on at the Museum of the Insurance Company of North America here.

The volunteer firemen of those days liked to "droll up" their equipment with painted panels attached to the sides of engines or hose wagons. Thomas Sully, pupil of Gilbert Stuart and Benjamin West, and other artists were hired to "pretty up" these panels, and they usually did it by painting portraits or other pictures thereon. A series of these panels is on view at the insurance company's museum.

Included in the Sully group is a portrait of Lafayette done in 1833 and taken from the engine of the Lafayette Hose Company of Philadelphia. Another panel is from the handpump of the Active Volunteer Fire Company of New York. Two other panels by John A. Woodside show "A Lady with A Harp" and "A Lady with A Banjo," while one of the best-known Woodside panels shows a portrait of George Washington in battle dress standing full length before a white horse.

The panels, made of mahogany, always were removed when the engines went to a fire. Sully, the painter, however, was a volunteer fireman in Philadelphia, and the records of the day show that he "never missed an opportunity to join the volunteers on their runs to fires."

Cardenas Blames Enemy For Talk About Troops

MEXICO CITY, D. F., Aug. 15 (AP)—Gen. Lazaro Cardenas was quoted here in press reports from the Pacific Coast port of Acapulco as accusing enemy agents of spreading false reports that Mexico was planning to prepare troops to "fight for the United States whenever the United States wishes to send them."

He said the agents' purpose was to interfere with Mexican defense plans. Senor Cardenas, a former President, had previously denied that Mexico was planning to send troops abroad. The newspaper La Prensa quoted him as saying Mexico declared war on the Axis on her own volition, free from any outside pressure.

Rios' Visit Token of Shift?

SANTIAGO, Chile, Aug. 15 (AP)—The announcement that President Rios would visit the United States this fall was taken by political leaders today as a sign that Chile was veering sharply toward a break with the Axis.

If Chile should join its 19 sister republics in the continental solidarity front, Argentina would be left alone as the only American nation on friendly terms with the Axis.

A large segment of Chilean opinion is ardently anti-Axis, and some political leaders who have been campaigning for a break predict that it now is inevitable—perhaps even before President

Too Many Fingers On Dental Poster

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (AP)—The United States Public Health Service, which is distributing posters to war plants urging workmen to take good care of their teeth, discovered to its chagrin yesterday that a dentist pictured on the poster has one too many fingers.

The dentist is shown probing into the open mouth of a husky workman. The left hand, which holds an instrument, has six fingers.

An argument is in progress among officials as to whether a six-fingered dentist is more efficient or whether the extra finger threat will keep people away from the dentist. Some contended that five fingers and one instrument in one mouth is enough.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 15 (AP)—Errol Flynn, Irish-born movie star, was granted American citizenship yesterday. He appeared unheralded, without a word to the publicity department of his studio.

The son of a Belfast biology professor, Mr. Flynn, whose 4-F draft classification belies the robust movie roles he portrays, has been described by his studio as attempting unsuccessfully recently to enlist in both Army and Navy.

Normal Production Resumed At General Cable Company

BAYONNE, N. J., Aug. 15.—Production of war materials proceeded at a normal pace today at the General Cable Company plant where workers who participated in a wildcat walkout found that Navy operation meant that wages and working conditions in effect before the strike would prevail.

Rear Admiral Harold G. Bowen quietly took over the strike-bound plant and posted a notice that "any interference with the operation of this plant is an offense against the United States."

In New York the National Association of Manufacturers characterized as confiscation and unfair the Government's seizure of the Bayonne plant.

William F. Witherow, N. A. M. president, praised President Roosevelt for his promptness in acting to enforce the National War Labor Board's decision to reopen the plant, but declared it was unfair to make management "an apparent defendant" with the "outlaw" strikers.

Characterizing the management as an "innocent bystander," Mr. Witherow said in a letter to George W. Taylor, Vice-Chairman of the NWLB: "Management will not be encouraged in war production by the knowledge that its best effort will be rewarded by confiscation if and when the labor party to collective bargaining chooses to defy Government."

In Washington a responsible Government official said notice probably would be served on employees of the General Cable Company that the Government did not intend to punish management for wildcat strikes among employees.

Russia to Get Cargo of War Goods From Argentine Anti-Axis Groups

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina.—When the Russian steamer Maikovsky leaves an Argentine port on an undivulged date that is regarded as a military secret, it will carry to embattled Russia a gift from pro-Allied Argentines of 1,000,000 pesos ($250,000) worth of medical supplies, food, clothing and shoes. The gift has been made in the face of police opposition under state-of-seige restrictions qualifying pro-United Nations work as "Communist activities."

Since Argentines are forbidden to effect the shipment themselves because the authorities did not wish to appear before the Axis as violating neutrality, since Russia has no diplomatic representation in Argentina, efforts are now being made to enlist the informal good offices of Allied Embassies for facilitating the necessary export license.

Because United States Ambassador Norman Armour last December became unofficially interested in facilitating the first shipment, with which there were no difficulties, it is believed that a similar interest may be taken in this, the largest single Argentine contribution to the Allied cause.

Five democratic organizations contributed their joint efforts toward the million peso gift: the Jewish Committee for Aid to the Allies; the Argentine Sanitary Committee; the Junta de la Victoria presided by Señora Ana Rosa S. de Martinez Guerrero; the Junta Juvenil de la Libertad, a democratic youth organization; and Dr. Augusto Bunge's Comisión Democrática Argentina. Dr. Bunge pioneered aid to Russia here and succeeded in co-ordinating the aid of all pro-Allied organizations.

The Bunge Committee specialized in sending 3,000 pairs of shoes made to withstand the rigors of the Russian winter. A special shop was installed in the Committee's headquarters, where the shoes were made by expert workmen with materials contributed by democratic Argentines. Some of the shoes are lined with sheepskin. Their manufacture was supervised by an expert Russian bootmaker and veteran of the last war, who knows what footwear a soldier needs in fighting on the frozen steppes.

Dr. Augusto Bunge forged into international prominence some time ago when the Government of (the then Acting) President Castillo took action against him for his pro-Russia activities along with 50-odd other so-called "Communists" whom Dr. Castillo decreed into exile. Collectively challenging the Executive decree, none left their homes despite the alternative threat of being sent into "confinement" if they did not comply. They were not molested, however, but the exile decree still stands.

Soldiers' Vote May Determine Choice of New York Governor

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 15.—The soldier vote may be an important factor in the selection of a Governor of New York State, according to the State War Ballot Commission, where the machinery necessary to obtain the ballots of the thousands of men and women in the armed forces of the United States who are within the Continent is on at full tilt. It will be speeded up after the two major political parties have made their nominations.

Just now the activities of the Ballot Commission, which was authorized by the last Legislature and an appropriation of $100,000 given it, are centered on obtaining the names and addresses of the soldiers and other servicemen and servicewomen. In this task, which has been under way since June 16, the Commission has met with obstacles some of which threatened to stop the machinery.

While the Army and Navy have co-operated fully with the Commission in its work, there has been no co-operation from the Selective Service. For this reason the Commission has asked Gov. Herbert H. Lehman to endeavor to bring about the co-operation necessary.

Governor Lehman has informed the Commission that he will try.

Thus far the Commission has received the names and addresses of about 8,000 men and women eligible to vote in the November election. An unofficial estimate places the number of New York State voters at between 400,000 and 500,000.

Applications for an absentee domestic ballot must be mailed

Playground Children Learn Kindness to Animals Pays

Playground youngsters are going to summer school this year at a summer school for kindness to animals.

For the first time in its history, the Animal Rescue League Educational Center, long known for its work among the schools, has opened a summer session in a building next to the League headquarters at 51 Carver Street.

These programs which began on Aug. 3 are under the supervision of Miss B. Maude Phillips, Director of Education, whose work in this field started in Labrador at the Grenfell Mission in 1922.

It was at the suggestion of Sir Wilfred that Miss Phillips took up puppy as a means of enticement-instruction for children. "Peter Rabbit" and "Uncle Josh," modeled from a real fisherman in Labrador, are among the most popular characters of her marionettes.

After her success in Labrador, the Education Director was welcomed in the schools of New England and since 1933 has traveled about in a station wagon from school to school, visiting nearly 300 and giving performances before 70,000 children during the season.

The summer school experiment was an instant success, and Miss Phillips finds her little auditorium crowded daily with from 80 to 100 youngsters from the neighborhood and nearby playgrounds.

She hopes within a short time to have a "lending zoo" at the Center, where children who have no pets may come in to observe or even borrow animals for a half hour or so, just to have the "feel" of really owning a pet.

More and more, the Education Director says, these children will be encouraged to take part in the summer school programs, writing their own little animal plays, making marionette dolls and drawing pictures to illustrate their lessons.

On Summer Stages First Concert Performance Directed by Koussevitzky

Dennis—Cape Playhouse: "The Bat," with Dorothy Sands, Cora Witherspoon, Otto Hulett, Harry Ellerbe.

Chatham—Monomoy Theater: "A Pair of Sixes," (Wednesday through Saturday).

Rockport—Forbes Theater: "The Slick from Punkin' Clock," (Wednesday through Saturday).

Holyoke—Valley Players: "Sky-lark."

Fitchburg—Lake Whalom Theater: "Ladies in Retirement," (Tuesday through Saturday).

Andover—Andover Drama Festival: "Anything Goes," (Monday only).

Maline
Boothbay Harbor—"Berkeley Square" (Wednesday through Saturday).

New Hampshire
Peterborough—Peterborough Players: "Mary's Ankle," (Thursday through Saturday).

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15 (AP)—The first concert performance in the western hemisphere of Dmitri Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony was given last night by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his student orchestra at a special Russian Relief benefit concert attended by Maxim Litvinoff, the Russian Ambassador.

The symphony, composed during the attacks on Moscow, was greeted with tremendous enthusiasm by nearly 3,000 persons assembled in the famed Music Shed at Tanglewood.

Previously played over the radio by Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Orchestra, the symphony so stirred the audience that they applauded after each of the four movements (regular Boston Symphony auditions never applaud between movements) and then gave the orchestra and its distinguished conductor a five-minute ovation at the end.

Litvinoff was presented to the audience from the stage, after Dorothy Thompson had spoken on behalf of Russia, and then returned to a box close to one occupied by Crown Princess Juliana of the Netherlands, who is summing at Lee.

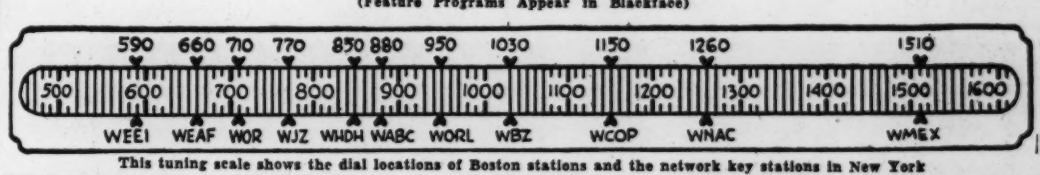

Edward C. Carter, of New York, president of Russian Relief, Inc., also asked for support of the organization.

The special program included opera excerpts, given in the theater, chamber music, and folk dancing on the lawn.

The formal evening program closed with solos by Albert Spalding, violinist; Gregor Gorksky, cellist; and Dorothy Maynor, soprano, who made her debut from the same stage two years ago.

Wartime Electorate Changes in New England Forecast Few Changes in Elected

Free Classes In Arranging One's Flowers

This column, appearing on Tuesdays and Saturdays, replaces for the summer the daily coverage of news of women's activities and organizations to be given during the club season.

By Jessie Ash Arndt

Woman's Editor of The Christian Science Monitor

"For the duration of the war, classes in flower arrangement, free or for the benefit of the Red Cross, will be given by the Associated Flower Arrangers of Massachusetts who conduct the Boston School of Flower Arrangement," says an announcement from the Director, Mrs. Arthur P. Teele, 100 Walnut Place, Brookline, Mass.

The organization was formed last spring with the purpose of putting the art of flower arrangement within reach of countless persons to whom it would open a channel of artistic expression.

The Flower Arrangers offer to bring to any community easily accessible and with adequate transportation facilities from adjacent towns "A Day of Creative Design With Flowers." The only cost to the sponsoring club is to be the small expense of the working committee. A short time ago, the first such course given by the group outside of Boston was conducted in Salem with more than 150 attending. There, Mrs. Teele talked from 10:45 in the morning until 4 in the afternoon, with a brief time out for lunch.

The plant material used in the arrangements is contributed by those who attend, and each new container and new assortment of materials presents a new problem, says Mrs. Teele.

Garden club members have long been interested in flower arrangement, but there are countless women who do not belong to these organizations who would like to learn the basic rules for good design and color combinations, she points out. The Flower Arrangers hope to reach them by means of their new project. Mrs. Teele and her five other members will conduct the classes. The Flower Arrangers will begin their fall classes at Horticultural Hall Sept. 10.

Mrs. Teele emphasizes in her instruction the use of simple materials near at hand—grasses, weeds, and pods—that cost nothing, but often in the most inexpensive containers can be used with strikingly artistic effect.

At her home she devotes to her hobby two basement rooms which are on the level of her back terrace. One is for classes and exhibits and the other for a workshop, with materials for drying and storing in boxes for winter arrangements. Milkweed pods, picked green, have quite a different color than those allowed to dry beforehand, she says, as have sumac, goldenrod, and other materials.

Explaining Art of Flower Placement

Mrs. Arthur P. Teele, Director of the Associated Flower Arrangers of Massachusetts, photographed in her workshop at her home in Brookline.

She advocates color in winter bouquets.

Mrs. Teele founded the Arrangers of Marblehead in 1933, and is its Honorary President. She is author of "Flower Arrangement Primer," which has been used throughout the country, has finished another book on flower arrangement, and now plans one on Christmas arrangements.

Flower Shows

Flowers may bloom in the spring, but they look their prettiest for flower shows in the late summer.

The New England Gladiolus Society has announced its show for Aug. 19 and 20 at Horticultural Hall, Boston. Mrs. Chester Cook of Lexington is Chairman of the Flower Arrangements Section, which will have as its theme this season "The Wedding." There will be classes for the decoration used as a background for the ceremony, that for the buffet breakfast, wall brackets used in the home as part of the wedding decorations, and so forth.

Newton Highlands Club

The Newton Highlands Garden Club is planning a Community Vegetable and Flower Show to be held Aug. 25 from noon to 9 p. m. at the Newton Highlands Women's Club Workshop, Columbus Street, Newton Highlands. The vegetable exhibit will include an arrangement of the "big six" vegetables and a grouping of "the best in your garden" in wooden bowls or in baskets.

There will be classes for annuals and perennials, flower arrangements—including one for children, designed to illustrate a book—an herb exhibit, house-plant exhibit, and a canning exhibit. Mrs. C. S. Perkins is chairman of the Show, with a general committee including Mrs. J. A. McAuliffe in charge of publicity; Mrs. Percy I. Merry, judging; Mrs. C. W. Webster and Mrs. A. H. Elder, hospitality; Mrs. Russell Mason, labeling; Allison Budgett and Percy I. Merry, staging, and Howard Whittem, finance.

Winthrop Garden Club

The Garden Club of Winthrop, at its meeting Monday morning, will have a flower exhibit, with Mrs. H. S. Reynolds and Mrs. Louis Cobb in charge. It will be an arrangement of petunias, and Mrs. T. C. Naedele and her Committee will act as judges.

The meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Donald H. Gardner, 178 Court Road, Winthrop, Mass., at 11 a. m.

Lo, the Lowly Two-Dollar Bill Holds Monopoly in Mexico

The humble and looked-down-upon two-dollar bill—though perfectly good American money—has found a friend at last.

That friend is every American who is to travel or visit Mexico, for the lowly two-dollar bill is the only American paper currency that now may be taken in or out of Mexico.

Every person planning to go to Mexico is warned to change all his money into two-dollar bills or coins, unless he plans to use checks, drafts, or similar mediums of exchange.

Joseph McGrath, Collector of Customs at Boston, sounded the warning today. The Treasury Department, it seems, is cooperating with the Government of Mexico, to prevent disposition within the Western Hemisphere of American currency "looted by the Axis powers in conquered nations."

The effect, said Mr. McGrath, is to prevent use being made of Mexico as a place in which Axis agents may dispose of American dollars looted abroad. Few two-dollar bills have fallen into enemy hands, he said, but it is known that large amounts of other denominations are in their grasp.

Mexico has prohibited the importation of all United States currency excepting two-dollar bills and coins, he said. All United States currency within Mexico has been ordered turned in to the Bank of Mexico and associated banks, and it will not be released by the Mexican Government.

In cases where persons turning money over to the bank can prove it was acquired legitimately and is "free from Axis taint," the Mexican peso equivalent will be turned over to the person surrendering the American currency, he explained.

Persons in Mexico failing to turn in all United States currency in their possession, will be treated as enemies of Mexico, according to Mr. McGrath.

Bay State Finds $492,000 In Unclaimed Bank Accounts

Massachusetts today is in line to receive rightfully and legally nearly $500,000 which has lain fallow in the banks of the Commonwealth for 20 or 30 years.

Bank accounts totaling $492,000 have been left unclaimed for a score or more years, Robert T. Bushnell, State Attorney General, found. A search of unclaimed accounts in Worcester, Suffolk, and Bristol Counties will be completed about the end of December.

The State is not the only beneficiary. A number of persons, some of them still unaware of their good fortune, will share approximately $80,000 when the time for division comes.

Mr. Bushnell began his quest for the treasure trove in January, 1941, and by the end of that year had cleaned up all unclaimed accounts of 20 years or more. This year he has restricted his search to the 30-year-old claims. After proper advertising, these accounts which nobody has remembered to go to the State. The system, modernized and clamped about with legal requirements, is an offshoot of the old English common law placing original title to everything in the sovereign. In those days, the land or goods or other unclaimed property escheated—reverted—to the King.

Back to the present, Mr. Bushnell disclosed that the cost of finding this hoard was about $15,000. The funds uncovered include about $25,000 from claimants involved in the so-called missing-heirs racket revealed by the Attorney General last year. This racket spread through half a dozen counties under the supervision of a ring of attorneys, genealogists, and others acquainted with old probate court records.

Several claims have been filed and claimants paid from the State Treasury since the 20-year-old accounts were turned over to the Commonwealth, Mr. Bushnell said.

Blakeslee to Join Smith College Staff

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 15—Smith College has appointed Dr. Albert F. Blakeslee, Cold Harbor, N. Y., to the William Allan

Neilson Chair of Research during 1942-43, and as guest professor for the two succeeding years. Dr. Blakeslee will continue experimentation on Jimson weed.

The College has leased a large greenhouse from Roberts and Farmer, florists, situated on the road between Northampton and Amherst, which will be renovated and equipped for the work of Dr. Blakeslee and his assistants. It will be known as the Smith College Experimental Station.

Dr. Blakeslee will bring with him two assistants, Miss Sophia Satina and A. G. Avery, who have been associated with him at Cold Harbor for many years.

A limited number of part-time assistantships provided by the Carnegie Institution and from other sources will be available to outstanding students who may register in the Smith College Graduate School without payment of the regular tuition fee. Graduate students from Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and Massachusetts State College will be welcome to work with Dr. Blakeslee and his assistants at the Experimental Station without charge.

Job Absences And Apathy To Cut Vote

There will be many changes in the electorate but few changes in those chosen at the polls next month and in November if the preliminary signs hold true in New England's first elections of the war.

So many disruptions have taken place in the normal pursuits of the people that tens of thousands will be unable to exercise their right to vote. It is estimated by some authorities that from 100,000 to 200,000 persons will be temporarily disfranchised in New England.

At the same time, apathy among those still able to vote is so great that more tens of thousands of voters are expected to forget this democratic privilege for the duration. Figures from one New England state indicate this tendency—possibly arising from a desire to aid national unity—is especially marked among women.

Yet some people will vote. Some candidates will be elected. And those elected will cast votes at Washington or make decisions at State Capitals that will determine much of the course of the war and the preparations for peace.

From political experience, it is axiomatic that when the number of voters falls off sharply, the candidates with the best political organization has the advantage, and officeholders, who have had wide opportunities to dispense patronage, are apt to be re-elected.

This, of course, is because those who have been personally assisted by a candidate, or expect to be personally rewarded by him, make it a point to vote, even when others do not.

Unusual changes in the composition of the electorate probably will result in fewer changes than usual among elected officials next fall.

Biggest change in the electorate will be the absence of so many young men in the armed services. On every continent of both hemispheres, New England youths are being stationed in ever-growing numbers in the League of Nations Branch—of the men able to vote by mail than in any previous war, but many thousands of them still barred by technicalities from doing so.

For instance, no Army or Navy men will be able to vote in three important primary contests next month, in which the issues bear on the conduct of the war which they are fighting and on efforts to prevent another. No absentee voting is allowed in Massachusetts primaries, nor in any election in New Hampshire, except for President.

The three contests:

1. Republican nomination for six-year term of United States Senator from Massachusetts: Courtney Crocker, President of the Massachusetts Branch of the League of Nations Association, co-operationist, versus Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., prewar isolationist.

2. Republican nomination for two-year term in Congress from First District of Massachusetts: Dr. Raymond L. Buell, former President of the Foreign Policy Association, co-operationist, versus Representative Allen T. Treadwell, prewar isolationist.

3. Republican nomination for two-year term in Congress from First District of New Hampshire: Chester Merrow, co-operationist, versus Representative Arthur B. Jenks, prewar isolationist.

Next largest group of disfranchised voters consists of workers and their families who have moved in recent months from one state to another to work in war plants and shipyards. In every state, a certain period of residence is required before a citizen may register and vote.

The most extreme case in New England is in Rhode Island, where no worker who has come to the great machine-tool plants, the Navy torpedo factory, or the new shipyards since June 1, 1940 (more than two years ago), may vote this year. The rule: two years' residence prior to the final date for registration (June 30).

In other states, the requirements are less stringent, but nevertheless will bar many thousands in Connecticut aircraft factories, Massachusetts ordnance plants, and Maine shipyards. The rules: Connecticut one year, Massachusetts one year, Vermont one year, Maine six months, New Hampshire six months.

Others who will be unable to vote are the military and civilians who have gone to Washington as executives, clerks, and stenographers. Residents of the District of Columbia are not eligible to vote.

Regarding those who still are eligible, the question looms: How many will vote?

Only election so far this year in New England was the Maine primary June 15, at which the turnout was one of the smallest in years. Only State in which biennial registration is required is Rhode Island, where total registration dropped 15 per cent from 1940 and nearly 25 per cent from 1938.

From these and other figures, it looks as if voters in New England Congressional and State elections this fall will be chosen by one of the smallest sets of voters in years. This is the last of three articles on New England voters. The others appeared Aug. 13 and 14.

New England Apple Crop Seen 28 P. C. Above 1941

The apple crop in New England for this year was estimated today at 7,775,000 bushels by the New England Crop Reporting Service of the United States Department of Agriculture, an increase of 28 per cent, compared with last year's crop of 6,080,000 bushels.

Nine Bay State Waacs Leaving For Des Moines

Nine new Women's Army Auxiliary Corps officer candidates from Massachusetts will leave this afternoon for the Waacs training school at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, according to the announcement today by Maj. Gen. Sherman Miles, commander general of the First Service Command.

This group will include Miss Katherine T. Chandler, nurse, 53 Spear Street, Quincy; Miss Rosalie Cohen, advertising manager, 24 Homestead Street, Roxbury; Miss Isabella Forster, insurance clerk, 200 Bay State Road, Boston; Miss Inez V. Fortunati, legal secretary, 22 Glenville Avenue, Allston; Miss Katherine Krauss, typist, 652 Morton Street, Dorchester; Miss Elsie C. Moran, secretary, 22 Lewis Street, Newton; Miss Matilda Pfauher, statistical clerk, 9 Biscayne Avenue, Weymouth; and Miss Lillian Shapiro, bookkeeper, 111 Chestnut Street, Haverhill.

These women, who will leave from North Station at 3:50 p. m., will receive $50 a month while in training, and upon successful completion of their eight-week course will be commissioned and assigned to duty.

12 Officers Added To Police Water

War emergency conditions have forced the necessary transfer of 12 State Department of Conservation officers to the Metropolitan District Police Force to guard vital water supplies, Raymond J. Kenney, Massachusetts Commissioner of Conservation, announced in Boston today.

To meet the changed line-up of his staff, Commissioner Kenney announced a complete realignment of all law-enforcement activities of the Conservation Department. Coastal wardens of the Division of Marine Fisheries have been sworn in as Deputy Conservation officers to give them the authority necessary to enforce inland fish and game laws in sections where Conservation officers have been released for emergency duties.

An appeal also has been made to volunteer Conservation officers to redouble their assistance and thus take up slack which may occur.

NWLB Boosts New England Textile Wage

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (AP)—A wage increase of 7½ cents an hour was reported yesterday to have been approved by the National War Labor Board for 61,000 workers employed in 40 New England and 11 southern textile mills.

Such an increase had been recommended by four out of five members of a NWLB mediation panel. An authoritative source who declined quotation by name said the Board itself had approved the recommendation of the panel.

A move to narrow the wage differential between the two regions by giving southern workers a larger increase was said by the same source to have been defeated. The mediation panel had reported that a study of wages in three NWLB labor cases involving the 51 mills showed that the workers received "substandard" pay.

The reported increase was less than had been asked for by organized workers. The Congress of Industrial Organizations' Textile Workers Union of America, which represented the workers in 28 of the New England mills and all of the 11 southern mills, had asked for a 10 cents an hour increase in the North and a 20-cent increase in the South. The union sought to wipe out the differential between northern and southern wages.

The American Federation of Labor United Textile Workers of America, which represents 11 mills in the New Bedford, Mass., area, and one in Waterville, Maine, also asked for an increase of 10 cents.

The panel, in making its decision acted upon a survey by the Bureau of Labor Statistics showing that in February 1942, average hourly earnings of textile workers of northern mills were 38.8 cents, and for southern mills, 48.7 cents. These rates were said to rank "below the vast majority of employees in other industries."

Affected by the wage increase would be about 48,000 employees in northern mills and 13,000 in southern mills.

Approximately half of the industry in the North was represented in the cases, and it was generally understood that the final wage decision would be accepted by the industry generally in that section. About 2 per cent of the southern mills were directly represented. They took the position that it would be unfair to base a wage decision for the southern industry on representations made by so small a part of it.

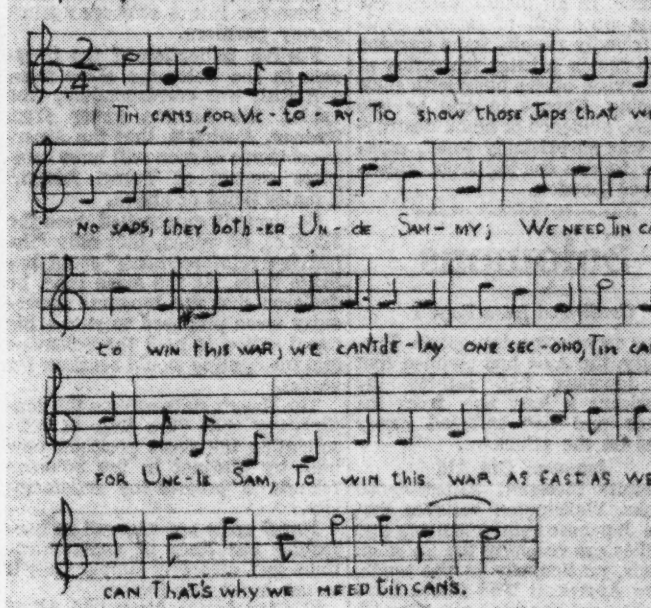

Free Tuition at College Urged to Aid War Effort

The annual tuition charge at the Massachusetts State College in Amherst would be suspended for the duration of the war under a recommendation made to Gov. Levetts Saltonstall by State Senator P. Eugene Casey of Milford.

In a letter to the Governor, the Senator stated that such a move would aid the war effort by encouraging young people to train for agricultural careers.

TIN CANS FOR VICTORY

'Tin Cans for Victory'

Three young song composers in action, "Tin Cans for Victory" is the original composition of three boys at the Marginal Street Center Summer Play School, East Boston. Here they are trying it out. Standing, left to right, Arthur Giangrande, publisher; Alfonso La Rosa, who wrote the lyrics, and, seated at the piano, Composer Francis O'Leary. Miss Louise Abell, leader of the Play School group, says that the idea for the song came from the boys themselves and they wrote the music and words unaided by grown-ups. Members of the group have been active this summer in saving tin cans, making toys for the Red Cross to send to children in the war-wrecked countries, and informing themselves on the status of "Boston at War" by visits to the Police Department, Fire Department, and other departments of the city operating under war conditions. Tin can house-to-house collection in Boston by city trucks will begin Monday, Aug. 17.

Bushnell Names Booras to Staff

Harris J. Booras of Belmont, active in Greek-American affairs, has been appointed a legal assistant by Robert T. Bushnell, Attorney General of Massachusetts.

Former President of the Order of Shepa, world-wide Hellenic organization, Mr. Booras is one of five persons decorated by the Greek Patriarch of Jerusalem with the title of Knight of the Holy Sepulcher and the Holy Land.

A graduate of Boston University, Mr. Booras was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar in 1925. He is also a member of the Federal Bar, and has been admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the United States.

Refugees From Hitlerism 'Finding' Selves in British Isles

with suspicion. They are afraid they are here to steal British trade secrets or British workers' jobs.

Suspicion persists, though to a steadily lessening extent, in most parts of the country. Allied complaints that the English worker is not going all-out come mostly from the areas where unemployment was most widespread before the war. They are to be found, for instance, in Newcastle-on-Tyne, where many people almost lost the habit of regular work during the years of the prewar depression. There I heard complaints of absenteeism, particularly among the girls.

An important contributory factor in this case is that the women workers are largely new to industry and the difficulties arising from trying to combine their desire to do war work with the business of keeping their homes going have not been fully adjusted. A new system of part-time work may prove to be the only solution.

Similarly the men find a disturbing influence in the new income tax regulations. In the past, they paid no income tax. Today, the rate climbs more and more steeply the longer they work. Consequently, a number of them prefer to restrict their earnings by working fewer hours. They have been used to a standard rate of extra pay for overtime and the present income tax regulations sometimes mean less instead of extra pay for overtime.

All this the foreign worker, whose greatest longing is to go home and who generally has to work much longer hours for less pay in his own country, finds it hard to understand. Not understanding, he is inclined to criticize.

In the North of England there have been certain rumblings of discontent which, however, are already being tackled. The coal miners, for whom higher rates of pay have now been agreed on by both sections of the industry, have been bitter for years, and they did not see why, just because there is a war, they should go on working for what they regarded as too low a wage—all the more so as workers in practically every industry are earning much more than in peacetime. Coal mining is a hazardous job and some of the miners have been getting considerably less than an agricultural laborer on the new scale which has been introduced since the war. The coal miner also complained that conditions in the hematite mines were better than in the collieries.

Mercantile Marine Grumbles
There are few, if any, foreign workers in the coal mines. But in another trade in which some grumbling is going on—the mercantile marine—the foreign worker is very much to the fore. Norway alone provides about one quarter of the allied merchant fleet and the other United Nations.

Nazi Wedge Imperils Stalingrad

and swift attack bombers were reported to be persistently striking at Japanese air bases and ship concentrations to protect Allied communication lines and staff off enemy reinforcements.

A Japanese convoy which an Allied spokesman at General MacArthur's headquarters said was attacked three times previously, again became the target of heavy bombers off New Britain to the northwest. The convoy included transport ships bound in an easterly direction toward the Solomons.

Bad weather veiled results of the latest assault but two more Japanese fighter planes were shot down and three damaged. All Allied aircraft returned to their bases, although some were damaged slightly.

Meantime, naval units protected the Allied communication lines and escorted supply vessels to the occupation forces. Army and shore-based aircraft continued to attack enemy air bases and harbors, the Navy reported.

Stream of Supplies Moving to Solomons
The Navy announced that a steady stream of supplies was moving to Marine forces in the Solomon Islands.

This statement that American lines of communication were fully under American control so that supplies were moving in freely was accepted generally to mean that reinforcements likewise would be moving up as needed.

Outcome of the battle for the island bases was expected to decide whether the Japanese retain the steppingstones to attacks on Australia and New Zealand or whether the United Nations gain a base for future offensives against enemy positions.

Further indication of the progress in the Solomons came from a British war correspondent, who cabled his London paper from Sydney, Australia, that the Americans "have or soon will have complete control of Tulagi Island," a major point of attack.

So strongly entrenched were the Marines, he added, that only "the heaviest reinforcements" could dislodge them. At the same time, he declared that the Japanese expected were prepared to risk a big naval action to hold the Solomons and the fighting would continue for weeks.

The Navy's statement on the conflict was that "the task of consolidating the shore positions now held by Marines in the Solomon Islands is progressing satisfactorily."

Naval units are engaged in protecting our lines of communication and escorting supply vessels to our occupying forces.

"United States Army and Allied shore-based craft are continuing to attack Japanese air bases and ship concentrations in enemy-held harbors."

Japanese reports reaching London via Germany acknowledged for the first time that United States forces have landed "on one of the Solomon Islands" and that fierce fighting is taking place with Japanese forces.

The rather belated report, a Tokyo dispatch to DNB, claimed—(for the second time)—that the naval phase of the battle had been concluded.

Soviet Setback:
Nazi Drive Wedge In Stalingrad Sector

New heavy Russian setbacks were sustained on at least three sectors today, and possibly a fourth, as the Russian position steadily worsened. Latest developments were recorded as follows:

1. Moscow admitted the Nazis had forced a "deep wedge" into Soviet defense south of Katskaya, in the Stalingrad sector.

2. Moscow admitted a new Russian withdrawal had been forced by advancing German forces south of Kotelnikowski, on the Don River bend sector.

3. Moscow admitted German armies had crossed the Kuban River at Krasnodar, in the northwestern Caucasus, just north of Maikop.

4. Berlin asserted its troops had captured Grozny, about 120 miles from the rich Grozny oil fields and about 20 miles southeast of Mineralnye Vody.

Withdrawal below Kotelnikowski, 95 miles southwest of Stalingrad, was made under pressure of superior enemy forces, the Soviet communiqué said, adding that after withdrawing "slightly" the Russians had "consolidated themselves in advantageous positions."

Soviet Counterattack Drives Back Nazis
The Germans also broke through northeast of Kotelnikowski, reaching the outskirts of an unnamed village, but in a swift and unexpected counterattack the Red Army threw back the invaders, the communiqué added.

The Germans were reported suffering losses in fighting south of Katskaya, 75 miles northwest of Stalingrad, where they succeeded in driving the wedge into Russian defenses and reaching the west bank of the Don River.

While the Red Army fought steadily at the approaches to Stalingrad, the struggle for the Caucasus moved on bitterly and the Russians acknowledged that forces of German automatic riflemen had crossed the Kuban River at Krasnodar. Krasnodar is only 60 miles northwest of the Black Sea naval base at Novorossiysk.

Earlier, the Germans had attempted to move tanks and mechanized infantry across the Kuban, the bulletin declared, but Russian planes aided harried ground defenders, knocked out the Germans' pontoon bridge, and struck heavy blows at German troop concentrations.

The Russian communiqué reported that, in addition to dispersing three battalions of infantry and German cavalry units, Russian fliers destroyed 16 tanks, 20 trucks, and 17 guns.

The German drive in the Maikop region south of Krasnodar and elsewhere in the Caucasian foothills was reported by the Army newspaper, Red Star, to be moving more slowly. Fighting was heavy, however, at Mineralnye Vody, 140 miles from the Grozny oil fields toward which the Germans are heading.

At Bryansk, 200 miles southwest of Moscow, the Russians attacked and expelled the Germans from an advantageous height and then repulsed a German counterattack by superior forces, the communiqué said.

South of Voronezh, on the Upper Don, the Germans launched sharp attacks in an effort to regain lost positions and succeeded in pushing the Russians back in one sector, Red Star reported.

The Russians recovered quickly, however, and threw the Germans back to their original positions, it was reported.

Britain Raided:
Fire Bombs Dropped By German Planes

Nazi raiders scattered fire and explosive bombs over the East Anglian area before dawn today while enemy long-range guns on the French coast lobbed half a dozen salvos of shells across the Dover Strait, it was announced in London.

The German Radio said Ipswich was the main bomb target and that the city was hit by several incendiary bombs.

In Rome, meanwhile, it was asserted that the battle was still going on and it was claimed that another United Nations destroyer had been sunk and three more vessels damaged—two cruisers and a battleship.

Autoists Can Boost Gasoline Mileage By Cutting Out Half of Car's Cylinders

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 15 (P)—By employing a simple, inexpensive trick discovered years ago and forgotten in America's desire for speed and power on the highways, motorists can get 30 to 40 per cent more mileage from their gasoline.

Details of the method, which involves operating passenger automobiles on half their cylinders and minor carburetor adjustments, were disclosed yesterday by Sun Oil engineers for the benefit of some 1,500,000 motorists on the Eastern Seaboard who are fretting over the gas problem.

"It's the start of what we think every motorist should agree to," said J. N. Pew, Sun Oil President. "It's only the beginning of things that can be accomplished if automotive engineers will pick up where we leave off and carry on this research."

As explained by John G. Moxey, Assistant Chief Engineer of the company's Research Department, the method boils down to three steps:

Removing valve lifters from every other cylinder so that both intake and exhaust valves remain closed; pinching together the points on spark plugs in the non-working cylinders so there will be no ignition spark; and carburetor adjustments to cut the flow of gasoline.

Some carburetors require two new parts, a larger metering pin and a low-speed jet. Other carburetors can be adjusted by blocking off half of the working unit. The two new parts, Mr. Pew said, are not available at present, but carburetor manufacturers have indicated they will stock them.

The whole operation, Mr. Pew said, costs about "a day's labor and a couple of dollars for the new parts if needed."

Tests still are being made with eight cars, all of the popular six and eight-cylinder models which Mr. Pew said represent about 75 per cent of the cars on the road. One test car, Mr. Moxey said, ran 36 miles on a gallon of gasoline.

Vichy Charges RAF Fired on Seaplane
By the Associated Press
Algiers, Algeria, Aug. 15
An attack upon an Air France seaplane over the Mediterranean yesterday assumed the proportions of a French-British incident as authorities charged the responsibility to Royal Air Force planes engaged in convoy battle.

A young girl, passenger, whose mother was killed in the machine-gunning of the regular Marseille-Algiers seaplane passed on during the night. Six other persons were wounded, four gravely.

French authorities asserted four British Hurricanes pursued the French craft which was hit by more than 100 machine-gun bullets.

Nazi Morale Found Shaken By Air Raids

are doing their best to feed the prisoners. In order to obtain a new suit of clothes an old suit must be returned first. This also suit must be turned into underclothes and to toothbrushes.

Fear of America
An interesting sidelight on morale inside of Germany is disclosed by reports on the present German reaction to the American war effort. When the United States first entered the war, Propaganda Minister Dr. Joseph Goebbels was quick to ridicule American efforts, but the German people now expect that American planes are going to bomb Germany and that American planes are giving effective aid in Egypt and the Far East.

Many intelligent Germans in Berlin are sadly pointing out the parallel between the late Emperor Charles of Austria's vain peace efforts during 1917 and a memorandum reported sent by Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria to the Nazi Government last winter in which the Prince asserted that the United States' entry into the war meant the defeat of Germany.

The fact that President Roosevelt recently declared that the United States already had 4,000,000 men under arms and large forces in Northern Ireland and Britain itself is also worrying Berlin.

The Germans, it is reported, still hope for a compromise peace following the Russian campaign, and the average German is deplorably ignorant of the Allies' stern attitude toward Germany and the conviction that the German people must be punished as well as their leaders.

Turkey Antagonistic
Meanwhile, although Nazi armies driving into the Caucasus have presented a new grave encirclement threat to Turkey, it is significant that public feeling here is more openly antagonistic to the Axis than at any time since war began.

That the Nazis themselves are aware of this is seen in the complete reorganization which is taking place in the propaganda of the German Embassy here.

Herr Lehotsky, who has just arrived from the department of Dr. Alfred Rosenberg, chief Nazi ideologist, in Berlin, is said to be advising how Nazis can rally a falling Turkish belief in Germany's power. Herr Lehotsky is especially interested in organizing Russian émigrés and Turkish minorities who fled from the Soviet at the time of the revolution. The Nazis are known to spend about 3,000,000 Turkish pounds a year on direct propaganda in this country and at present the Nazi press attaché, Schmidt Dumont, who is leaving the country in September, has been severely criticized by Berlin for discouraging results from this large expenditure.

Planning New Lines
However, this reorganization does not mean that the Nazis are relinquishing their efforts here, but they are planning new lines of attack. Their main efforts are being directed in attempting to arouse a large Turkish element in Azerbaijan, Caucasian Russia, against their present Soviet masters. So far this maneuver has met with little success and recently the newspaper Yenisebah bitterly attacked the Nazi move and warned their Azerbaijan brothers to beware of Nazi propaganda and false promises.

Poles Form Armored Corps As Underground Acts Grow

LONDON, Aug. 15 (P)—Gen. Wladyslaw Sikorski, Premier of the Polish Government in London, announced the formation of a Polish armored motor corps for "a future offensive on the continent" yesterday as the spirit of rebellion appeared to be on the rise in German-occupied Europe despite executions and reprisals.

From Norway, Czechoslovakia, the Netherlands, France and Greece came reports of punishment for sabotage and anti-Nazi activities, while via the Moscow radio the French were advised to "prepare for armed struggle" because "the real fight is at hand."

Fighting French headquarters here declined to comment on the radio-cast but dispatches from the Soviet capital quoted Roger Garreau, Fighting French representative in Moscow, as making a plea to prepare for open insurrection.

The greatest tension was experienced in the Netherlands where a midnight deadline had been set for the arrest of saboteurs who last week wrecked a Nazi military train near Rotterdam.

The execution of an unannounced portion of 1,600 hostages was threatened by the Germans unless the saboteurs surrendered or their identities were disclosed to the authorities.

Dutch Government officials here openly expressed fears a greater number of victims than originally faced execution might be killed because of an attempt to blow up a Nazi-operated radio station.

Today is "Soldiers' Day" for the Polish Army, which hopes to invade the continent and regain the territory Hitler captured in 1939. General Sikorski disclosed that his forces had grown from 35,000 a year ago to more than 100,000.

This makes it the fifth strongest army of the United Nations, he said, disclosing that part of them are parachute troops. The Polish Air Force is now twice as strong as it was before the German invasion. Polish fighter squadrons, the general said, have shot down more than 500 Axis planes, and the bomber squadrons have participated in 3,000 raids and dropped 8,000,000 pounds of bombs on Germany.

Austrian Refugees in Britain Reproduce Fine Glasswork

By Melita Sprague

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

LONDON—Continental artists and craftsmen, driven from their homes in Europe by the Nazi regime, enrich the present British scene with work which may prove as far-reaching in its effects as was the art of the Huguenot silk-workers in the 18th century.

One of the most brilliant of Viennese glass-designers, Fritz Lampl, who escaped to England when the Germans marched into Austria in 1938, has gathered round him in London a band of men and women exiled from their homeland, to carry on production of hand-produced glassware.

Achievement of beauty in glass has been Mr. Lampl's life work, and the Carnegie Exhibitions of his work which toured American cities before the war were tribute to the success of his accomplishment in Vienna. In London, designs from old Greek coins have afforded a new medium for his artistry, and have given fellow Austrian refugees the opportunity to work.

In his early days in England, Mr. Lampl visited the British Museum, where he studied the old Greek coins. Fascinated by their clarity of design and outline, he went to the coin room again and again. The ones from the small Greek islands—where handicrafts flourished eight centuries B. C.—were especially attractive.

When he tore himself away from the Museum and tried to consider the prosaic problem of what to do for a living, an idea for utilizing in some way the work of the old Greek artists kept fitting into his thought and eluding him like a will-o'-the-wisp. At last he arrested it. Why not make these beautiful designs available to the modern woman?

Mr. Lampl sought permission of the Museum authorities to take plaster casts of some of the designs, and metal dies were made from them. Now, buttons, earrings, fobs, clasps, necklaces, bracelets, many forms of decoration in glass, go out from the heavy-studded door of the restored Tudor house in Mayfair. They find their way to the most fashionable dress salons in Britain.

Ceramics designs are worked out by Mr. Lampl's colleague, Lucie Rie, also an exile from Austria. Curtailment of supplies of material for the manufacture of cheap machine-made jewelry and buttons in Britain has made a demand for, and increased appreciation of, these hand-produced designs.

Rationing of clothes and regulation of style and material have forced British women to seek ornament in extraneous detail. A gilded glass knot on a plain black dinner gown with miniature knots for earrings, they find, more than makes up for lack of self-trimming on the gown.

Export orders come in from many parts of the world—the United States, Canada, India, Portuguese East Africa, and so on. A large consignment recently was dispatched to Iceland. Many famous dress designers have their own exclusive models in pottery and glass. Captain Molyneux himself chooses the designs he wishes to have reserved exclusively for his Mayfair salon.

Mr. Lampl has adopted for his new London production center the title of his famous Viennese establishment—Bimius—chosen originally because it is the name of a group of islands discovered by Vasco da Gama off the coast of Florida, and noted for the beauty and variety of its flora and fauna.

Civilians in London Organize To Resist Possible Invaders

Recorded by CBS

LONDON, Aug. 15—Six and a half million civilians of London have been organized, street by street, to be ready to assist the city's armed defenders should Britain be invaded and the invaders reach London, the British radio reports.

In the event that normal services of food, water, power, fuel and so on were cut off from certain sections of London, local inhabitants would have to carry on their communal life temporarily by themselves out of their own resources. They'd also have to help the defending British troops in all the ways in which an unarmed civilian can. They'd be in effect a beleaguered garrison in the middle of London. This is what Londoners are learning to do now, the BBC states. The organizing structure already exists in the ARP Warden Service. For every area of a few thousand people, there is a warden's post and for some weeks the wardens have been busy going around their areas and appointing a civilian leader of the people in each street.

The street is the invasion defense unit and the street leader is in charge of it. His or her job is to visit every house in the street and settle what each inhabitant is going to be if invasion comes in the district.

It is expected that a civilian can help his own troops by digging trenches, carrying away debris and filling up bomb or shell craters and helping to look after casualties. The civilians can get together and run emergency cooking services, water, fuel and sanitation services, in case water mains and power lines are destroyed. They can look after refugees and they can store and distribute food.

The street leader has to find out first, which people in the street have the proper education. They make a note of anybody who knows something about first-aid, any man who's got the strength and skill to dig trenches, any woman who's accustomed to cooking for large numbers and would be useful in a communal feeding center.

Street leaders make a list of useful equipment in the street, such as coal stoves and battery wireless sets, in case the electric current fails, a list of digging tools in the street, a list of houses suitable for storing food and equipment, for receiving refugees, or being turned into emergency first-aid posts, war feeding centers. And the leader has to form parties from the inhabitants of his street, one for digging trenches, one for running the emergency water supply, one for looking after the wounded, one for billeting refugees, and so on.

All this has been done in the outlying parts of London, which would receive the attack first. One town on the outskirts had a rehearsal the week before last. An emergency water service was run, and emergency news service which might be very important; there were tests of the communal cooking arrangements, the emergency sanitation scheme, the working of the first-aid service and the digging parties.

Nazis' Victims Rally to Churches

By Robert Powell
Special Correspondent
The Christian Science Monitor

LONDON, Aug. 15.—The Inter-Allied Information Committee's report on Nazi attempts to wipe out all religions in the occupied countries offers fresh evidence that religious persecution under Hitler is having an opposite effect from what is intended.

It is widening the rift between the occupied and the occupiers, and in a majority of cases is rallying subjugated peoples around their church—be it desecrated or destroyed—as the nodal point of their spiritual resistance.

The committee's report, made public earlier this week, is the third account of conditions in the occupied countries published under the auspices of the Governments in Exile. It is a significant summary of the Reich's attempts to abolish Christianity within its conquered domains.

The accumulated evidence permits little doubt that the aim of the Nazis is the stamping out of both collective and individual worship on the grounds that it is a danger to totalitarianism.

Free Thought "Dangerous"
The main Nazi attack has always been upon freedom of thought whether spiritual or temporal, and one of the best compliments which the Nazis could pay to free religious worship is that this was one of the first things Nazi Germany attacked after it assumed power because it was realized that therein was one of its greatest enemies.

Persecution became more brutal and open as the Nazis obtained greater powers, but it is only the logical outcome of theories which Hitler, the Nazi ideologist Dr. Alfred Rosenberg, and others propagated throughout Germany years ago.

Hitler once said he wanted "fearless, vigorous commanding and cruel youth with strength and beauty of young beasts of prey" to execute his orders.

Moral Standards Shelved
He has got them and they have acted upon their Führer's advice that "conscience is a Jewish invention . . . it mutilates man." They have ignored all moral considerations in carrying out their tasks.

The consequences, as disclosed

Clergymen in Oslo Reproach New Bishop

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

More than 100 clergymen of the Oslo Diocese recently sent a letter to Dean Lars Andreas Froeyland reproaching him because he accepted the position of Bishop of Oslo.

The letter said that the clergymen back Bishop Berggrav and other bishops of Norway who have been forced to break church rules laid down by the Nazis. It added that Dean Froeyland would "necessarily become a lonely man as bishop of the Oslo diocese."

In the committee's report Aug. 13, are shown in the deliberate and calculated atrocities, destruction or desecration of churches, altars, and shrines, arrest and torture of church dignitaries, mostly because they attempted to carry out their religious duties.

It is impossible to give many details of these persecutions in different countries. A few outstanding examples must suffice. In Poland, the Germans set out from the beginning to exterminate the Roman Catholic Church with the result that some 4,000 Polish priests have been either shot or imprisoned.

Spiritual Resistance
That these methods have not always met with success is seen in the report that, despite the arrest of more than 500 Czech clergymen, the Church still remains today the rallying point for Czech spiritual resistance.

Similarly, the attempt to undermine Norway's religious front through violent assault on its State Church and arrest of Bishops has only resulted in consolidating Norwegian opinion against the Nazi puppet Premier, Maj. Vidkun Quisling, and his masters.

The same situation has developed in France. In Alsace the Abbey of St. Odile was closed and desecrated, as has also the Strasbourg Cathedral. Much ecclesiastical property was seized.

The same persecutions in lesser or greater degree, varying with local opposition, have been carried on in Occupied France, Holland, Belgium, and Luxembourg.

Must Be "Good Nazis"
Church officers of these countries have been told quite plainly that their first duty is to the Nazi state, not to their religion, and that officials of the Third Reich—which now includes subject peoples—"must above all be good Nazis. They must choose one or other—Jesus Christ or the Führer."

Reports of the effect of this policy in the occupied countries leads to but one conclusion—namely, that Nazi policy has had the opposite effect from that expected. The rift between the Nazis and subject peoples has grown wider, and different branches of the Christian Church have come closer together.

This is clearly illustrated in Holland where Protestants and Roman Catholics on a number of occasions have made almost identical appeals to their parishioners.

This co-operation has been so marked that one Dutch Nazi paper has declared that despite their many disputes both Churches were now "unanimously agreed in the fight against Nazism."

Unity on Religious Freedom
Unity has also been shown to a hitherto unexpected degree among Protestants and Roman Catholics within Germany itself.

Most of the earlier pronouncements of Roman Catholic Bishops like Michael Cardinal Faulhaber and Count Clemens von Galen were mainly concerned with protests against Nazi interference and persecution of their particular church or flock.

More recent sermons, especially by Count von Galen and Conrad von Freyburg, Bishop of Berlin, have emphasized the importance of the fundamental religious freedom in general.

There is also evidence of the feeling of shame with what many Germans in the churches have watched this process of persecution extended from within Germany outward.

Although it would be an exaggeration to say that at the moment this constitutes a strong opposition from the viewpoint of immediate political action there [and Hitler knows it] it is an important factor of disintegration.

It isn't without significance that one should hear reports of the formation of groups in Germany which call themselves "the party of decent Germans" determined to restore Germany's good name once more.

Nothing has been said in the Inter-Allied Committee's report about treatment of Jews. The religion always has been persecuted, but Nazis have treated them from a racial rather than a religious point of view.

What the Nazis are doing in Europe their Japanese allies also are doing in China where Christian missionaries have been massacred, churches closed, and Chinese Christians murdered.

Buying Education Not Inflationary

By a Staff Correspondent
The Christian Science Monitor

HOBOKEN, N. J., Aug. 15.—Besides buying war bonds, Americans can help beat inflation by investing more of their increased wartime earnings in education, Dr. Harvey N. Davis, President of Stevens Institute of Technology, recommended today.

"Inflation will come, if it comes, chiefly because there is so much more purchasing power loose in the country than there are things available to be purchased," he said. "This is the basis for the present pressure to save instead of spend—to buy War Savings Bonds instead of radios."

"There is, however, another way to combat inflation and that is to divert purchasing power from goods, which are scarce, to services, which in many cases are much less scarce."

Bund Youth Leader Admits Conspiracy

NEW YORK, Aug. 15 (AP)—Hugo Richard Steimle, youth leader of the German-American Bund, pleaded guilty to an indictment alleging conspiracy to counsel Bund members to violate the Alien Registration Act.

Federal Judge Eugene Rice remanded Mr. Steimle to jail pending the trial of 25 other Bund leaders named in the indictment and in another indictment charging some of them with counselling Bund members to violate the Selective Service Act.

The indictments, returned July 7, named 29 leaders of the Bund living in all parts of the nation. Three already have pleaded guilty. The trial of the 25 is scheduled to begin Aug. 18.

Once-a-Day Mail Delivery in Sight

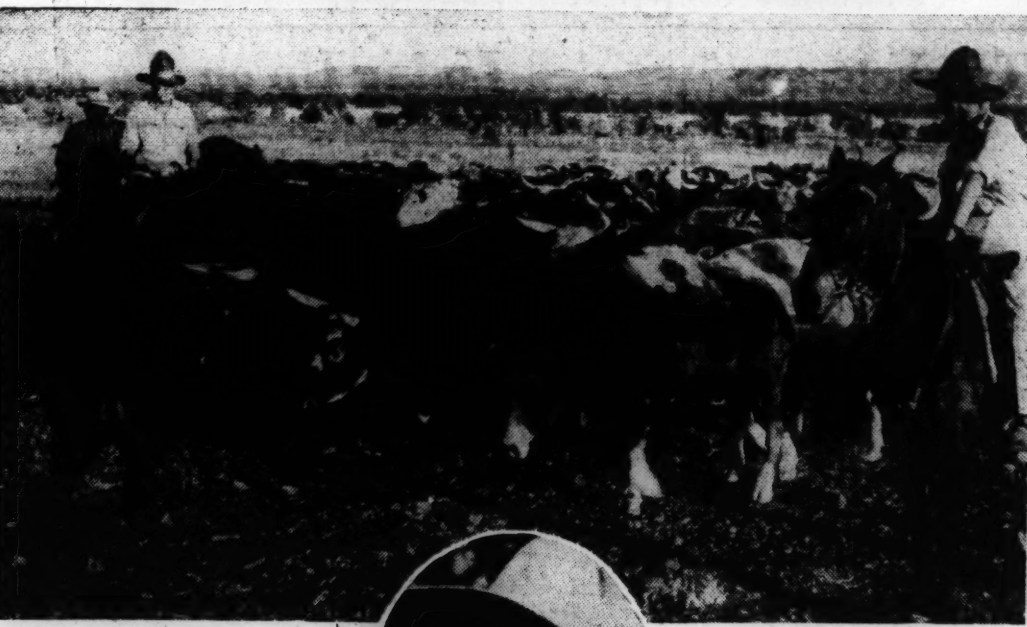

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (AP)—Once-a-day home delivery of mail and fewer collections from corner boxes are in prospect in many cities, Post Office officials declare, because of approaching shortages in personnel, tires and trucks.

The officials said that the changes could be ordered locally by postmasters to meet individual situations. They expressed the view that adequate mail service could be maintained, however.

Post Office trucks now make as many as eight and nine collections a day from mail boxes spaced throughout residential areas. Collections will be reduced in many cases, because the Post Office Department is unable to buy any trucks, officials explained, and as trucks wear out it will be necessary to expand the area each one covers.

Desert Drive Of Cattle To Aid Australia

By Michael Terry, F. R. G. S.
Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Australia

The great feat of driving 32,000 cattle from 800 to 1,000 miles over Australia's vast northern desert, recently ordered by the Commonwealth Department of Supply, is a trek that has fired the imagination of all Australians. From the wildest and most remote regions of the continent, huge herds have been started on their way to the various packing centers of Western Australia and Queensland. These are supplementary to the great annual movements of cattle in these parts.

Some of the Kimberley cattle will be driven 1,000 miles. They will be "on the road" half a year. About 300 cattlemen will be needed for them; 1,300 horses will be ridden at the task. One third of a million gallons of water will have to be drawn at sundown "to water" the great herds. Wells are being specially repaired, cleaned out, timbered and their pumping apparatus overhauled. Stores are being laid down along the routes and guards left at the caches.

Railage arrangements are being made far in advance of the arrival of the first herds at trucking points.

Record Movement

Australian stockmen are used to big figures, big distances, huge mobs of cattle, vast territories—and large checks after months on the road. Even they are surprised at the magnitude of the task given them by war in the Pacific. They believe it will be greater than anything of the sort in the United States or the Argentine, possibly also in Russia.

Beef is particularly needed in Australia. American troops prefer it to mutton or lamb. Domestic demand is up due to refugees from Java, Singapore, Hong Kong and elsewhere. Fighting men of the United States, Free France, the Netherlands and the rest, including Axis prisoners, account for abnormal consumption. Also the Australian troops from the Near East are back home to defend their homeland.

The situation became worse when Wyndham was bombed; it is now definitely a front-line port. The packing plants there have been ruled out of operations. They used to handle 35,000 to 40,000 cattle each season. Moreover, each year about 12,000 cattle have been driven from the stations—ranches—of the Fitzroy River Valley and adjacent areas for sea shipment at Derby to Fremantle. That traffic also has been affected by war.

The Minister for Supply, John A. Beasley, therefore decided upon a great series of driving feats for Australian stockmen this year.

Remarkable Conquest

One of the routes to be followed is man's most remarkable conquest of the desert, the Canning Stock Route, named for A. W. Canning, who pioneered it 35 years ago. It has a provisional width of five miles in case anyone should wish to "take up" the desert through which it passes. For 900 miles from the gold-mining town of Kimberley to Wiluna in the south, the route crosses as pitiless a region of sandhills as this world can possess. Peopled only by roving bands of blacks, practically all of it lies across virgin country. Nevertheless Mr. Canning established wells every 15 to 20 miles.

At Meekatharra, west of Wiluna, the rail starts south and leads in about 600 miles to Perth. The east-bound cattle from East Kimberley will go to Dajarra, Queensland, where they may be trucked to Townsville, Bowen and Rockhampton in Queensland. Although a much longer walk for them, these cattle will merely do what thousands have done every year for a long time.

In normal times it is not unusual any year for 20,000 head to leave the large northern stations for the markets of the south. They go to Dajarra or to Alice Springs for railage thence 1,000 miles to Adelaide.

Dajarra Route Busy

This year, however, cattle which should have gone to Wyndham are being forced upon the Dajarra route as well.

When Wyndham operates, drovers can make several trips in a season. Now many extra outfits are needed as they cannot be shuttled.

Ordinarily 1,000 cattle can be handled by a head drover, his second-in-charge, four stockmen, a horse-tailer and a cook. During the day the "mob" is travelled in two lots of 500 each. They camp together. This time probably 300 men will be required—a large figure among the scattered cattlemen

'Mercy' Goods From U. S. Off To N. Africa

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (AP)—The Office of War Information announced yesterday that two French merchant vessels had been permitted to sail for Vichy-governed North Africa carrying American goods said to be in "great need" there.

The ships left the United States on Aug. 9. In exchange, two vessels sailed from Casablanca on Aug. 11 with goods destined for this country. Included were cork and olive oil—both scarce here—tardar and other North African products.

American consular agents in Morocco, Algiers, and Tunisia will supervise the distribution of the "nonmilitary, consumer goods" shipped from here to see that they are used by the local populations and are not re-shipped to other countries, OWI stated.

The Ile de Noirmoutiers and the Ile de Cussessant carried a mixed cargo to North Africa, made up of brown sugar, copper sulphate, cotton cloth and thread, condensed milk, leaf tobacco, tea, and fuel. Five thousand tons of coal and 1,200 tons of kerosene for lighting and heating were aboard the Ile de Cussessant. Under present conditions, these supplies can be obtained only from the United States.

The Ile de Re and the Aldebaran were the vessels loaded at Casablanca with goods for this country.

Body Found in Brazil Of Argentine Military Man

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, Aug. 15 (AP)—The body of Lieut. Col. Camilo Gay, Argentine military attaché, was found yesterday in an ocean front cave after an unidentified person had notified police by telephone. His car was parked near by.

In Buenos Aires, the Argentine foreign ministry said it had been notified the body had bullet wounds in the head and shoulder.

Police said a watch and money were found in Gay's pockets. The officer had requested a transfer to an Army post sometime ago, and an order for him to report for duty in Mendoza, Argentina, arrived two days ago, they said.

British Plan 'American Weeks' To Learn More About Ally

Wide World-Associated Press

LONDON, Aug. 15.—England's average man, who in prewar years was willing to dismiss the United States as one of the colonies that got away, now is trying hard to understand the country across the sea which suddenly has become such a vital ally.

Schools which formerly taught American history only in its bare relationships with developments in British history now are delving into the facts of the independent development of the United States.

Study groups and societies have turned their attentions to visualizing and understanding the American scene, and educational officers of the Army have learned that private soldiers place lectures and books on the United States high on their lists of preferences.

Letters asking questions ranging from simply "what is the Capital of Rhode Island?" to "what was the political and economic background to passage of the immigration law of 1924?" pour daily into the American Embassy in London.

From Many Sources
They come from such varied people as the Chaplain of an isolated searchlight post who wanted material "illustrative of war and peace in the United States," and a schoolgirl who wanted to make the United States the subject of her weekly theme.

Second Secretary Dorsey Fisher, whose duties include those of information officer, answers all that he can and refers others to the American Outpost in Great Britain and the American division of the Ministry of Information, two organizations which specialize in handling the new flood of queries about the United States.

Some letters show ignorance about even the simplest factors in American life and geography. One British journalist wanted to know "just what is the Middle West?"

Other correspondence falls into regular categories such as: Requests for pamphlets and pictures, lists of recommended books on United States history and economics, requests for an American who can lecture on some phase of life in the United States.

The overworked Embassy has to refer all requests for speakers to some other organization, but many American newsmen have done yeoman duty along this line.

Queries About the Flag
Other requests are more specialized: A woman wanted to know the design of the United States flag in the days when it had only 13 stars.

A Hertfordshire school wanted a photograph of President Roosevelt to award as a prize in a village sports contest.

Two fire watchers wanted their argument settled as to whether "Stars and Stripes Forever" or

"Yankee Doodle" was the national anthem.

Another fire-watch station asked for the words and music of the national anthem so they would "be able to sing the whole thing properly when President Roosevelt comes to see us."

A small boy wanted to know on which verses of the Bible President Roosevelt had taken his last inaugural oath because the pastor of the boy's village offered a prize for the discovery.

With typical British tenacity, when the London sources were stumped, the boy wrote to the White House, got an answer and got the prize.

Seeks Letter Exchange
Many of the letters from adults are written on lonely fire-watch vigils or during a lull at ARP headquarters. But one written from a home displayed the yearning for a deeper sisterhood between Great Britain and America.

The writer described herself and her civil servant husband as "ordinary middleclass folks with an intense love of our country."

She wanted to correspond with an American woman of her own age and station in life because "in view of the mental sufferings which must now be tormenting Americans, perhaps my outlook after 2½ years of trial, setbacks and humiliation of national esteem may strengthen some American woman at the outset of her own trials."

Daily there are increases in the number of schools writing to say they plan an "America Day" or an "America Week" to focus attention on their newly active interest in the United States.

Nazis' Victims Rally to Churches

By Robert Powell
Special Correspondent
The Christian Science Monitor

LONDON, Aug. 15.—The Inter-Allied Information Committee's report on Nazi attempts to wipe out all religions in the occupied countries offers fresh evidence that religious persecution under Hitler is having an opposite effect from what is intended.

It is widening the rift between the occupied and the occupiers, and in a majority of cases is rallying subjugated peoples around their church—be it desecrated or destroyed—as the nodal point of their spiritual resistance.

The committee's report, made public earlier this week, is the third account of conditions in the occupied countries published under the auspices of the Governments in Exile. It is a significant summary of the Reich's attempts to abolish Christianity within its conquered domains.

The accumulated evidence permits little doubt that the aim of the Nazis is the stamping out of both collective and individual worship on the grounds that it is a danger to totalitarianism.

Free Thought "Dangerous"
The main Nazi attack has always been upon freedom of thought whether spiritual or temporal, and one of the best compliments which the Nazis could pay to free religious worship is that this was one of the first things Nazi Germany attacked after it assumed power because it was realized that therein was one of its greatest enemies.

Persecution became more brutal and open as the Nazis obtained greater powers, but it is only the logical outcome of theories which Hitler, the Nazi ideologist Dr. Alfred Rosenberg, and others propagated throughout Germany years ago.

Hitler once said he wanted "fearless, vigorous commanding and cruel youth with strength and beauty of young beasts of prey" to execute his orders.

Moral Standards Shaved
He has got them and they have acted upon their Führer's advice that "conscience is a Jewish invention . . . it mutilates man." They have ignored all moral considerations in carrying out their tasks.

The consequences, as disclosed

Clergymen in Oslo Reproach New Bishop

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

More than 100 clergymen of the Oslo Diocese recently sent a letter to Dean Lars Andreas Froeyland reproaching him because he accepted the position of Bishop of Oslo.

The letter said that the clergymen back Bishop Berggrav and other bishops of Norway who have been forced to break church rules laid down by the Nazis. It added that Dean Froeyland would "necessarily become a lonely man as bishop of the Oslo diocese."

In the committee's report Aug. 13, are shown in the deliberate and calculated atrocities, destruction or desecration of churches, altars, and shrines, arrest and torture of church dignitaries, mostly because they attempted to carry out their religious duties.

It is impossible to give many details of these persecutions in different countries. A few outstanding examples must suffice. In Poland, the Germans set out from the beginning to exterminate the Roman Catholic Church with the result that some 4,000 Polish priests have been either shot or imprisoned.

Spiritual Resistance
That these methods have not always met with success is seen in the report that, despite the arrest of more than 500 Czech clergymen, the Church still remains today the rallying point for Czech spiritual resistance.

Similarly, the attempt to undermine Norway's religious front through violent assault on its State Church and arrest of Bishops has only resulted in consolidating Norwegian opinion against the Nazi puppet Premier, Maj. Vidkun Quisling, and his masters.

The same situation has developed in France. In Alsace the Abbey of St. Odile was closed and desecrated, as has also the Strasbourg Cathedral. Much ecclesiastical property was seized.

The same persecutions in lesser or greater degree, varying with local opposition, have been carried on in Occupied France, Holland, Belgium, and Luxembourg.

Must Be "Good Nazis"

Church officers of these countries have been told quite plainly that their first duty is to the Nazi state, not to their religion, and that officials of the Third Reich—which now includes subject peoples—"must above all be good Nazis. They must choose one or other—Jesus Christ or the Führer."

Reports of the effect of this policy in the occupied countries leads to but one conclusion—namely, that Nazi policy has had

DAJARRA ROUTE BUSY
This year, however, cattle which should have gone to Wyndham are being forced upon the Dajarra route as well.

When Wyndham operates, drovers can make several trips in a season. Now many extra outfits are needed as they cannot be shuttled.

Ordinarily, 1,000 cattle can be handled by a head drover, his second-in-charge, four stockmen, a horse-tailer and a cook. During the day the "mob" is travelled in two lots of 500 each. They camp together. This time probably 300 men will be required—a large figure among the scattered cattlemen

Desert Drive Of Cattle To Aid Australia

By Michael Terry, F. R. G. S.
Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Australia

The great feat of driving 32,000 cattle from 500 to 1,000 miles over Australia's vast northern desert, recently ordered by the Commonwealth Department of Supply, is a trek that has fired the imagination of all Australians. From the wildest and most remote regions of the continent, huge herds have been started on their way to the various packing centers of Western Australia and Queensland. These are supplementary to the great annual movements of cattle in these parts.

Some of the Kimberley cattle will be driven 1,000 miles. They will be "on the road" half a year. About 300 cattlemen will be needed for them; 1,300 horses will be ridden at the task. One third of a million gallons of water will have to be drawn at sundown "to water" the great herds. Wells are being specially repaired, cleaned out, re-timbered and their pumping apparatus overhauled. Stores are being laid down along the routes and guards left at the caches.

Guard arrangements are being made far in advance of the arrival of the first herds at trucking points.

Record Movement

Australian stockmen are used to big figures, big distances, huge mobs of cattle, vast territories—and large checks after months on the road. Even they are surprised at the magnitude of the task given them by war in the Pacific. They believe it will be greater than anything of the sort in the United States or the Argentine, possibly also in Russia.

Beef is particularly needed in Australia. American troops prefer it to mutton or lamb. Domestic demand is up due to refugees from Java, Singapore, Hong Kong and elsewhere. Fighting men of the United States, Free France, the Netherlands and the rest, including Axis prisoners, account for abnormal consumption. Also the Australian troops from the Near East are back home to defend their homeland.

The situation became worse when Wyndham was bombed; it is now definitely a front-line port. The packing plants there have been ruled out of operations. They used to handle 35,000 to 40,000 cattle each season. Moreover, each year about 12,000 cattle have been driven from the stations—ranches—of the Fitzroy River Valley and adjacent areas for sea shipment at Derby to Fremantle. That traffic also has been affected by war.

The Minister for Supply, John A. Beasley, therefore decided upon a great series of droving feasts for Australian stockmen this year.

Remarkable Conquest

One of the routes to be followed is man's most remarkable conquest of the desert, the Canning Stock Route, named for A. W. Canning, who pioneered it 35 years ago. It has a provisional width of 10 miles in case anyone should wish to "take up" the desert through which it passes. For 900 miles from the gold-mining town of Kimberley to Wiluna in the south, the route crosses as pitiless a region of sandhills as this world can possess. Peopled only by roving bands of blacks, practically all of it lies across virgin country. Nevertheless, Mr. Canning established wells every 15 to 20 miles.

At Meekatharra, west of Wiluna, the rail starts south and leads in about 600 miles to Perth. The east-bound cattle from East Kimberley will go to Dajarra, Queensland, where they may be trucked to Townsville, Bowen and Rockhampton in Queensland. Although a much longer walk for them, these cattle will merely do what thousands have done every year for a long time.

In normal times it is not unusual any year for 20,000 head to leave the large northern stations for the markets of the south. They go to Dajarra or to Alice Springs for rail, thence 1,000 miles to Adelaide.

Dajarra Route Busy
This year, however, cattle which should have gone to Wyndham are being forced upon the Dajarra route as well.

When Wyndham operates, drovers can make several trips in a season. Now many extra outfits are needed as they cannot be shuttled.

Long Trek Is On

of Kimberley. It may be that the Army will have to release men to make up the outfits. American cowboys would not be suitable as their methods of droving differ greatly from the Australian. For instance, Australians use the stockwhip and seldom, if ever, a rope.

Drovers move about 8½ miles a day or 60 miles a week. The cattle have to be hurried over dry stages, spelled at good feed and halted for inspection at veterinary control points.

Each man in the big droves needs three day horses, the "chuck wagon" needs four and some spares, six night horses—picked for their quiet stepping and sight in the dark—are needed for camp watch. About 40 horses comprise each "plant." About 1,300 horses will be used this year in the big treks.

Drover's Responsibility

A drover is not liable for loss en route unless carelessness can be proven. He should get 25 a head for each 100 miles. If 6,000 cattle go on a 720 mile trip, contracts will be let for £4,500. Usually the white hands get £6 a week and keep, paid to them by the head drover out of his cheque from the station with which he contracts.

At about 4 a. m. the camp is roused and breakfast handed out. The cattle move off by 5:30 a. m. or daylight. They travel till middle morning when they are allowed to rest till early afternoon. At about 2 p. m. the drovers move them on again so that water can be reached at about 5 p. m. They are settled down by dark.

If the stage is long between waters and the cattle are thirsty, they are travelled at night also. The spacing of waters means nearly always alternate nights without a drink. If they are 20 miles apart night work is inevitable. A bullock likes to drink about 10 gallons every day.

When the animals sink down for the night and give a long low sigh—that is the drovers' delight. It means they are tired and contented. If they fidget about, any untoward sound may cause them to rise en masse and be off in a mad stampede.

This explains night horses' need for special eyesight. The night-rider has to gallop through the bush, risking collision with a tree or plunging down a gully, so that he can get to the leaders of the mob, steady them and hold them till the other drovers arrive.

'Mercy' Goods From U. S. Off To N. Africa

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (AP)—

The Office of War Information announced yesterday that two French merchant vessels had been permitted to sail for Vichy-governed North Africa carrying American goods said to be in "great need" there.

The ships left the United States on Aug. 9. In exchange, two vessels sailed from Casablanca on Aug. 11 with goods destined for this country. Included were cork and olive oil—both scarce here—tardar and other North African products.

American consular agents in Morocco, Algiers, and Tunisia will supervise the distribution of the "nonmilitary, consumer goods" shipped from here to see that they are used by the local populations and are not re-shipped to other countries, OWI stated.

The Ile de Noirmoutiers and the Ile de Cusness carried a mixed cargo to North Africa, made up of brown sugar, copper sulphate, cotton cloth and thread, condensed milk, leaf tobacco, tea, and fuel. Five thousand tons of coal and 1,200 tons of kerosene for lighting and heating were aboard the Ile de Cusness. Under present conditions, these supplies can be obtained only from the United States.

The Ile de Re and the Aldebaran were the vessels loaded at Casablanca with goods for this country.

Body Found in Brazil Of Argentine Military Man

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, Aug. 15 (AP)—The body of Lieut. Col. Camilo Gay, Argentine military attaché, was found yesterday in an ocean front cave after an unidentified person had notified police by telephone. His car was parked near by.

In Buenos Aires, the Argentine foreign ministry said it had been notified the body had bullet wounds in the head and shoulder.

Police said a watch and money were found in Gay's pockets. The officer had requested a transfer to an Army post sometime ago, and an order for him to report for duty in Mendoza, Argentina, arrived two days ago, they said.

British Plan 'American Weeks' To Learn More About Ally

Wide World-Associated Press

LONDON, Aug. 15.—England's average man, who in prewar years was willing to dismiss the United States as one of the colonies that got away, now is trying hard to understand the country across the sea which suddenly has become such a vital ally.

Schools which formerly taught American history only in its bare relationships with developments in British history now are delving into the facts of the independent development of the United States.

Study groups and societies have turned their attentions to visualizing and understanding the American scene, and educational officers of the Army have learned that private soldiers place lectures and books on the United States high on their lists of preferences.

Letters asking questions ranging from simply "what is the Capital of Rhode Island?" to "what was the political and economic background to passage of the immigration law of 1924?" pour daily into the American Embassy in London.

From Many Sources

They come from such varied people as the Chaplain of an isolated searchlight post who wanted material "illustrative of war and peace in the United States," and a schoolgirl who wanted to make the United States the subject of her weekly theme.

Second Secretary Dorsey Fisher, whose duties include those of information officer, answers all that he can and refers others to the American Outpost in Great Britain and the American division of the Ministry of Information, two organizations which specialize in handling the new flood of queries about the United States.

Some letters show ignorance about even the simplest factors in American life and geography. One British journalist wanted to know "just what is the Middle West?" Other correspondence falls into regular categories such as: Requests for pamphlets and pictures, lists of recommended books on United States history and economics, requests for an American who can lecture on some phase of life in the United States.

The overworked Embassy has to refer all requests for speakers to some other organization, but many American newsmen have done yeoman duty along this line.

Queries About the Flag

Other requests are more specialized: A woman wanted to know the design of the United States flag in the days when it had only 13 stars. A Hertfordshire school wanted a photograph of President Roosevelt to award as a prize in a village sports contest.

Two fire watchers wanted their argument settled as to whether "Stars and Stripes Forever" or

"Yankee Doodle" was the national anthem.

Another fire-watch station asked for the words and music of the national anthem so they would "be able to sing the whole thing properly when President Roosevelt comes to see us."

A small boy wanted to know on which verses of the Bible President Roosevelt had taken his last inaugural oath because the pastor of the boy's village offered a prize for the discovery.

With typical British tenacity, when the London sources were stumped, the boy wrote to the White House, got an answer and got the prize.

Seeks Letter Exchange
Many of the letters from adults are written on lonely fire-watch vigils or during a lull at ARP headquarters. But one written from a home displayed the yearning for a deeper sisterhood between Great Britain and America.

The writer described herself and her civil servant husband as "ordinary middleclass folks with an intense love of our country."

She wanted to correspond with an American woman of her own age and station in life because "in view of the mental sufferings which must now be tormenting Americans, perhaps my outlook after 2½ years of trial, setbacks and humiliation of national esteem may strengthen some American woman at the outset of her own trials."

Daily there are increases in the number of school writing to say they plan an "America Day" or an "America Week" to focus attention on their newly active interest in the United States.

Ted Williams Finds Washington and St. Louis Pitching Staffs Easy to Solve

Red Sox Slugger Pounds Ball Facing Those Rivals

By Ed Rumill
Staff Writer of the Christian Science Monitor

A break-down of Ted Williams' batting average, which at .343 early today was the best in the majors as the Red Sox plunked into a week-end series with the Washington Senators, reveals several interesting facts. For example, if the young slugger who already belongs to Uncle Sam's Naval Air forces could swing against Washington and St. Louis pitching every day, passing Hughie Duffy's all-time high of .438 would be a cinch.

In the language of the ball player, Williams has "worn out" the staff managed by Bucky Harris. In 15 games "The Kid" has compiled a sensational .453 figure. Against Luke Sewell's Brownie mound group Ted has emerged with a .421 pace.

No Home Runs
However, even though the Washington staff has taken a beating from Williams this year, it has it all over rival moundmen in at least one respect. Ted has yet to hit his initial 1942 home run against the Senators. Five of his 24 four-baggers were made in the St. Louis series. Too, he has driven in the substantial total of 18 runs in meetings with the Browns. It is not the Californian's fault that Sewell is lodged in the first division of the American League.

The figures further reveal what a lot of people have suspected for some time: that Jimmy Dykes bothers Williams as he "rides" him from the top step of the White Sox dugout. Against the Chicago club, Ted has done no better than .250, with only one home run—one of the chief reasons why the Red Sox all year have had trouble beating the White Sox; why the two clubs have played so many close, low score games.

Yanks Successful
The Yankees, too, have been successful in their efforts to stop the spark of the Boston attack. That Joe McCarthy has concentrated on Williams in this pennant race is shown by the boy's slim .261 mark in Yankee games. This figure would seem to shatter the belief that he would hit far better if wearing a New York uniform and playing 77 games a year in the Stadium. His average in the park beside the Harlem River is a poor .280.

According to mathematics, Fenway Park is no handicap to the kid slugger. Going into today's double-header with the Senators, he had made 59 hits in 177 appearances at home for a good .333 pace and had 10 homers and 49 runs batted in. Ted's 1942 marks in other parks are: Washington .452, St. Louis .448, Detroit .359, Cleveland .333, Philadelphia .273 and Chicago .261. Facing rival clubs, both here and away, his marks are: Washington .453, St. Louis .421, Detroit .359, Cleveland .327, Philadelphia .300, New York .261, and Chicago .250.

Williams has found the home run range in all league parks except Griffith Stadium and Comiskey Park. He gets another crack at Chicago when the Red Sox make their next and final western tour.

Two Veterans Reach Final Of Western

CHICAGO, Aug. 15 (P)—The "teen-age" golfers, who made quite a splash in the Western open in June, were all on the sidelines of the women's Western amateur today as a pair of veterans—Mrs. Russell Mann, of Omaha, Neb., and Betty Jameson, of San Antonio, Texas, put on the championship show at Sunset Ridge.

Mrs. Mann, who has been at this business for some 15 seasons, and Miss Jameson, a veteran of 11 campaigns, went after the championship over the 36 hole route, 18 in the morning and the balance in the afternoon.

Through the Mill
These girls not only have been through the tournament mill before, but also have had a good share of championship cups in the last 10 years.

Mrs. Mann, for instance, won the title as Lucille Robinson in 1933. She took it again last year. Thus today she sought to be the fifth golfer in history to win two straight amateur titles and the seventh ever to win three. Miss Jameson grabbed this year's Western open and was in line to be the first girl ever to win both Women's Western Golf Association events in a single summer. She also took the amateur once before, in 1916, when she beat the late Miley, 6 and 5. Betty's record also recalls her double win in the national, in 1939 and 1940.

Pleasant Temperaments
The finalists have, in addition to a pair of sparkling careers, two of the most pleasant temperaments that ever had to contend with the business of tournament golf. They were the favorites of the Sunset Ridge lounges and locker rooms from the opening day, when Mrs. Mann won medalist honors with a par 77 and Miss Jameson came in close behind with an 80.

Mrs. Mann advanced to the championship round by defeating Mary Agnes Wall, Menominee, Mich., one up. Miss Jameson's semi-final victory was at the expense of Dorothy Ellis, Indianapolis, the Indiana State champion, whom she defeated 3 and 1.

Schedule Released At Athens School

ATHENS, Ga. (P)—Capt. C. E. Smith, commanding officer of the Athens Naval Pre-Flight Training School, has announced a nine-game schedule to be played by the station's varsity football team this fall.

The card includes one inter-sectional test with Pennsylvania, five games against major Southern schools, and three with other service teams. A 10th game probably will be scheduled.

Sept. 26—University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia.

Oct. 2—Naval Pre-Flight School of Chapel Hill, N. C., at Athens (night); 10—Duke University at Durham, N. C.; 17—Pensacola (Fla.) Naval Air Station at Pensacola; 24—Louisiana State University at Baton Rouge; 31—Jacksonville (Fla.) Naval Air Station at Athens.

Nov. 7—Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Columbus, Ga.; 14—Tulane at New Orleans; 28—Alabama at Birmingham.

Miss Brough In Essex Semifinal

MANCHESTER, Mass., Aug. 15 (P)—Fourth-seeded Louise Brough of Beverly Hills, Calif., entered the semifinals of the Essex Country Club's 18th annual women's tennis tournament yesterday when she won a postponed quarterfinal match from unranked Kay Winthrop of Hamilton, 6-4, 6-2.

Miss Brough, undefeated this year, was scheduled to meet Margaret Osborne of San Francisco, the tourney's defending champion, in a semifinal match today. The other semifinal paired Top Seeded Pauline Betz of Winter Park, Fla., and Doris Hart of Miami.

Naval Cadets Open Penn Grid Season

Special to The Christian Science Monitor
PHILADELPHIA—This fall for the first time since 1929 the University of Pennsylvania will open its season by playing a game in September. The Naval Aviation Cadets from Georgia will meet the Red and Blue on Franklin Field in what promises to be one of the most difficult opening assignments a Red and Blue team has had in years. Pennsylvania played its first September game in 1886. In 1892 and 1893 games also were played the same month. From 1896 until 1917 the season opened annually in September.

National A. A. U. Crown Retained By Nancy Merki

NEENAH, Wis., Aug. 15 (P)—With two new championships crowned and a defending titlist easily outdistancing challengers in the first three events of the National Women's A. A. U. swimming championships last night in the new Municipal Pool, attention turned toward the backstroke event carded for today, when Gloria Callen was due to seek her third consecutive 100-meter title.

The New York mermaid, holder of more than 30 national records, was favored to repeat.

Nancy Merki, Portland, Ore., was the defending titlist who retained her 150-meter free style crown. Miss Merki did the course in 22:18, steaming down the lanes more than 25 meters ahead of her closest competitor.

Ann Hardest beat out Mary Ann Werts, an Indianapolis teammate, for second. Betsy Blake, Cleveland, was fourth.

Suzanne Zimmerman of Portland, Ore., churned out a victory by inches in the 100-meter free style. Her time was 1:10.3. Marilyn Sahner, New York, was second. Brenda Helsler, defending champion, and Suzanne's teammate, was third.

Indianapolis swimmers dominated the 300-meter individual medley, with Joan Vogel doing the distance in 4:43 to take over the crown won in 1940 and 1941 by little Chieko Miyamoto, Hawaii, who was unable to arrange transportation to the States.

Second was Betty Bemis, Indianapolis, and third was Patricia McWhorter, Plainfield, N. J.

Five-Stroke Lead Is Held by Hogan

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 15 (P)—Blazin' Ben Hogan moved into the third session of the $5,000 Times-Union open today well fortified with a five-stroke lead—the result of two days of sub-par play. Yesterday the slender Texan carded a two-under par 68—four strokes above his record-smashing opening round of 64 for a 36-hole total of 132.

Little Ben's nearest competitor, five strokes back at 137, was the veteran Harold (Jug) McSpaden, Philadelphia. The other low scorers included Sammy Byrd, ex-Yankee outfielder, and Chick Harbert, the St. Paul open winner from Battle Creek, Mich., both of whom posted even-par 140's.

Capt. Christy Mathewson, Jr., is the son of the late pitching hero of the National League. Young Matty is stationed at Thunderbird Field in Arizona.

Ventnor Tournament Book
Roy Desauter, 4 South Quincy Avenue, Ventnor, N. J., has just issued a pamphlet containing all the games played in the 1942 Ventnor City Invitational Chess Tournament. This can be secured for fifty cents.

National Co-Champions
I. Kashdan, who equaled S. Reshevsky's score in the National Championship, requested that the United States Chess Federation clarify the situation. Since no play-off had as yet been arranged, it would seem that the two should rank as co-champions, with no third player having the right to request a challenge championship match until a single champion has been determined.

To avoid a recurrence, some rule should be adopted making a play-off mandatory. This matter will be taken up in the annual meeting held during the Dallas tournament, Aug. 25 to 30.

Ventnor Game
A. Yanofsky lost only two games in the Ventnor City tournament, which he won by full point: to Levin, of Philadelphia, and to L. Levy, New York. Here is the latter game, which was a very familiar with the Alekhine's Defense, and gradually overwhelmed his opponent.

Veteran Golfer Appearing To Play Better Than Ever

By A. Linde Fowler
This season has been sensational for the number of rounds of 65 or better in golf tournament play, principally on the part of the well-known professionals, yet a thing that has impressed this writer even more is the number of "veterans" (not necessarily as far along in years as in golfing experience) who feel that they never hit the ball farther or played better, at least in spots, than this year, even though they have more or less dropped out of competition compared to their younger days.

One day recently I bumped into Fred J. Wright, Jr., seven times winner of the Massachusetts amateur championship, winner of the State junior championship as long ago as 1915, and remarked upon his fine 35 to the turn in the Metropolitan Four-Ball League field day at Tedesco some weeks ago and his winning a Trapelo weekend tournament with one-up over par, the only times I had seen his name in competition this season, except in an exhibition match at Camp Devens in which he, Emory Stratton, Wade Roberts of New Hampshire, and Kenny Cochrane had participated.

"It's a funny thing," said Freddie, "but I never hit the ball so far as in that exhibition match. I happened to be outhitting Emory 20 yards or more a number of times, until he finally asked, 'Fred, where are you getting all that distance?' All I could tell him was that I was stepping up and hitting the ball."

Game Improved
More recently I chanced to meet Durham Jones, who with Gerald Henderson qualified in the first division of The Country Club for the Jacques Cup, who with his son, Durham, Jr., won second gross in the Winchester father-and-son, the only pair except Joe Monahan and Junior who broke 80 gross, their total 78, and who with J. V. R. Bright as partner went to the final of the first flight in the Essex four-ball. He, too, admitted to an improvement in his game, as more recently exemplified in a 74 at Charles River, in which were two out-of-bounds and some inferior putting on the last nine.

In previous articles, reference has been made to the long hitting of veterans Judge Monahan and Howard Paul at The Country Club and their showing up of most of the youngsters off the tees. Then there is the case of Dr. C. T. Porter, who with Pierce Edmunds as his partner won the Clyde Cup in the Jacques Cup tournament at The Country Club and followed that up by winning the round-a-day at Essex County with W. O. Kenney, another veteran, as his partner, three of the four matches finishing at the home hole and the doctor being the main cog all the way through the tournament.

Six Holes in One
Only a week ago I saw where R. Murray Purves won the low gross in a Woodland Club tournament, with a 74. Murray was rated at handicap-5 in the M.G.A. list of 1916 and it seems to me that I can remember him in competition years before that. One thing I do know, from his own lips, is that he has had six holes-in-one. Earlier in the year a gross at Woodland was won by Perley Crosby with a 73, and only this week he won the Woodland open with a 70. Until these two tournaments Perley had been out of local tournament play for a long time. Purves is my authority for the statement that in one of their rounds this season Crosby drove the eighth green, over 300 yards. He always was a long hitter. In 1928 he went to the final of the N. E. amateur losing to Bill Blaney, the acting President of the M.G.A. Frank Craven, member of the Board of Directors at Charles River and a caddy contemporary of Francis Ouimet, scored a 69 at his home club one evening this week. That smooth swing of his must have been working very efficiently.

Seniors Champion
Four years ago Hollis won the New England Seniors' championship at Woodland with rounds of 77 and 78. Those scores were mediocre compared with two of his recent efforts on the first nine holes of the much more exacting Cyster Harbors course, one a 36 to the turn and the other a 37. On the 36 he began a 4, 2, 5, 2, 5, 4, 5, 5, finishing with two bogeys after having earlier registered birdies on the second, third, and fifth.

His later 37 to the turn I can attest to as an observer. He was wide of the first hole in two, pitched up for one putt and a par. On the par-5 second he was well short in two and pitched up for another one-putt and a birdie. On the third he was trapped from the tee, pitched on and sank an 18-footer for a 3. On the fourth he missed a 10-footer for a birdie. On the fifth he was trapped on his tee shot, exploded five feet from the cup and missed the putt. On the sixth he was in the woods on the drive, hit the last branch of the last tree on his second, played out, then on 20 feet from the cup and sank it for a 5. On the seventh he sank a 50-foot putt for a birdie; on the eighth was not quite on in two, but pitched up for one putt and on the ninth, three-putted for a 5, instead of the 4 which would have given him his second 36 to the turn within a week's time, the 37 made from tee-markers far back. He showed me an old-fashioned mashie-niblick with which he had registered two aces during his career, a niblick of the 1915 vintage.

American Painting Has Its Mark Twain

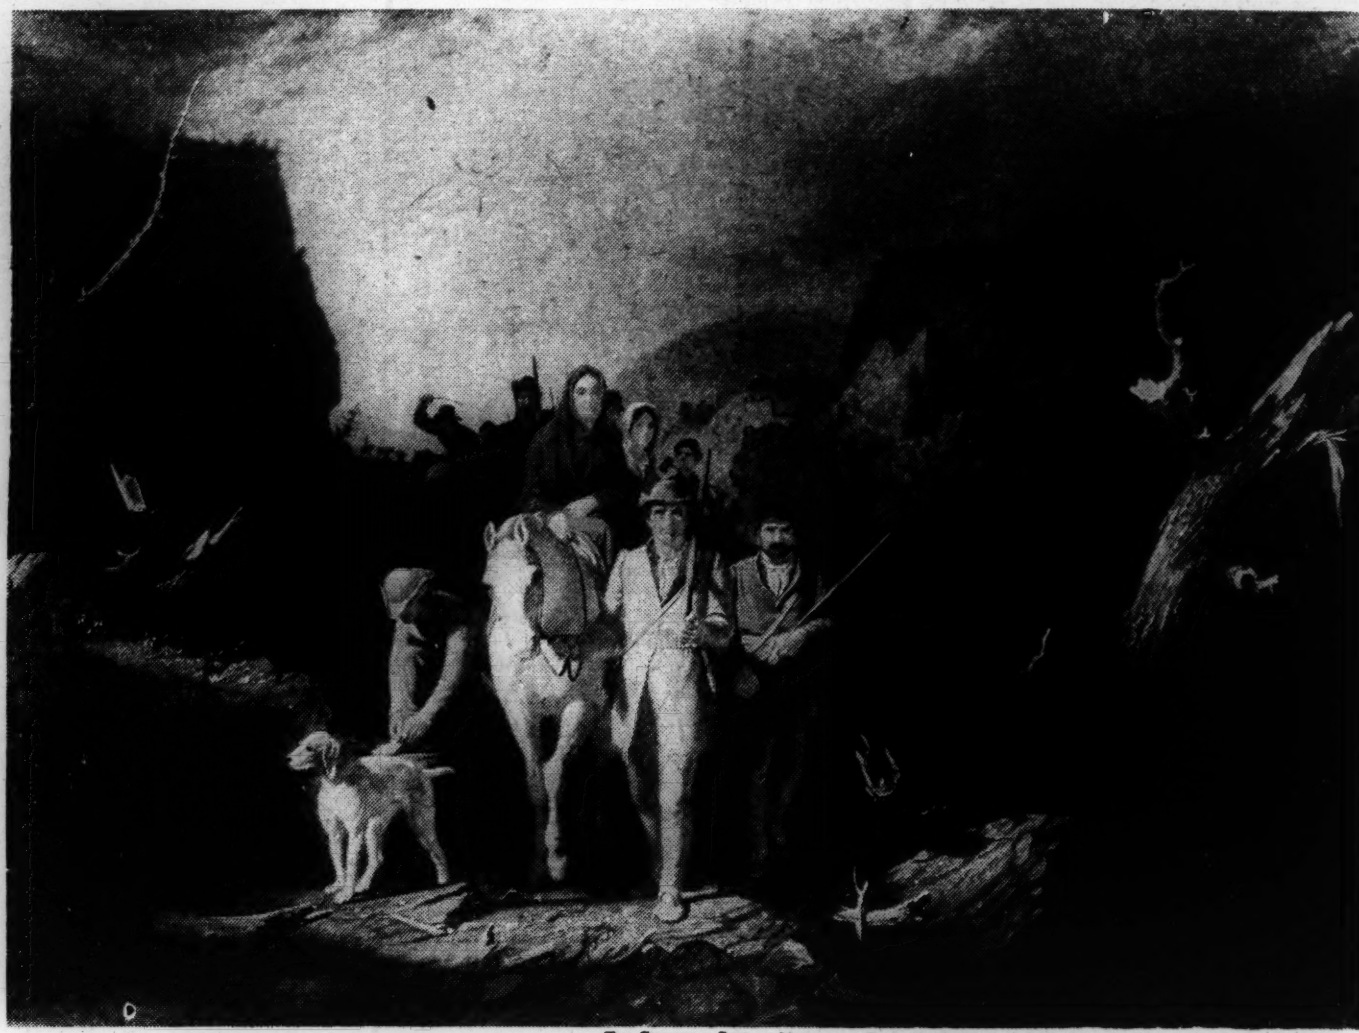

IN THE PROCESS of looking inward and backward, of re-examining all the expressions of its native genius, America is lovingly searching out old paintings and prints of places and the portraits done by itinerant painters in pre-camera days. America is now collecting her folk paintings as well as her folk songs. The work of the genre painter is getting particular attention, for our interest in these artists is twofold: we are interested both in the painter as artist and as recorder of the American scene. No painter of the American scene, in the first half of the nineteenth century, painted more truthfully and eloquently than the Missouri artist, George Caleb Bingham.

Bingham and Mark Twain had much in common. Both came originally of Virginia stock; the stock that settled Missouri was Virginia stock hardened and made ebullient by a generation of frontier life. Both men were brought up in small Missouri river towns in the decades when Missouri was feeling her oats, rapidly emerging from an interior wilderness into a place of considerable agricultural and commercial importance. Both—and this is important—eschewed the genteel tradition: both revelled in the native homespun idiom. Both did their best work in describing the Missouri life they saw about them in their youth.

The Franklin which molded Bingham, as Hannibal molded Mark Twain, was only three years old when the Bingham family settled there in 1819, but already it had one hundred and twenty log houses. Every way the boy turned, he must have seen emigrants, disembarking from keelboats they had poled up the Missouri, or climbing down from the Conestoga wagons they had driven over the Boone's Lick Trail from St. Charles. Two years after the Bingham family reached Franklin, when Bingham was a boy of ten, Captain William Becknell opened the Santa Fe Trail; and, from then on until the Missouri River got the town of Franklin in 1829, Franklin was crowded with traders and freighters and Mexican muleteers. When the long caravans set off, the whole town sped them on their way with songs and speeches. It was the Missouri Valley at its moment of greatest exhilaration, and it happened that young Bingham had a ringside seat to the Big Show to his and our advantage.

Bingham must have seen many a voyager like the lithe, graceful fur trader who paddles down the wide Missouri from the mountains, in his "Fur Traders Descending the Missouri." He may well have admired the wild, unkempt boy who leans on the duffel between the fur trader in the stern and the chained bear in the bow, as the young Mark Twain admired and envied the youthful apprentice engineer on the steamboat in the St. Louis-Keokuk trade. He may well have ridden again and again such a raft as the one on which the two raftsmen play cards, in his "Raftsmen Playing Cards."

In the fall of 1856, Bingham settled in Düsseldorf, at the time a favorite place of study for American artists. Henry Lewis, who, in 1846 and 1847, had drifted down the

"DANIEL BOONE COMING THROUGH CUMBERLAND GAP": A Painting by George Caleb Bingham

Mississippi River from St. Paul to New Orleans, painting salient scenes and places as he went along, was living in Düsseldorf and there publishing colored lithographs of the scenes he had painted on the American river. Certainly the two men must have met and talked of the Great River. The appearance of Lewis's lithographs of river scenes may well have stirred Bingham to do his "Jolly Flatboatmen." It is one of Bingham's best genre pictures. Surrounded by boatmen in various attitudes, the central figure atop the hatch of a flatboat dances a joy-spreading breakdown, cuts a pigeonwing, while a fiddler seated on a nail keg fiddles some such tune as "Clar de Kitchen," and a gap-toothed boy beats out time on a skillet.

Such pictures of the ebullient boatmen of America's Western Waters move us by their power of characterization and the successfully projected joy of the artist in the life depicted. They are also indices to the value of the lost Bingham, for many of the Missouri artist's pictures are lost. Among these are such river views as the St. Louis landing, a Missouri woodyard where steamboats wooded-up, raftsmen descending the Ohio, a lighter relieving a steamboat aground, and a landscape along the Ohio River. One lost painting, called "County Politician," particularly arouses our interest. From a contemporary newspaper account, we know that this picture contained a jolly old landlady; a politician discussing Wilcox's Proviso with a farmer; "while a boy, with his coat-tail turned up to the stove, is reading a showbill." That boy and that show-bill interest me. In 1849, when that art notice was published in St. Louis, another Missouri boy, later to be known as Mark Twain, was also poring over show-bills advertising circuses traveling by water.

We are so mobile and so pictorially rich today that we find it difficult to realize what Bingham's pictures meant to his generation. Engraved and distributed by subscription, they told the people of his time what Missouri and the great rivers of the Missouri-Mississippi Valley looked like. To his generation, they were news; to us they are history. He set down scenes of exploration and settlement that no man will ever have the opportunity to witness again.

HORACE REYNOLDS

Eeuwigdurende Veiligheid

Vertaling in het Nederlandsch van het op deze bladzijde voorkomend artikel over de Christelijke Wetenschap

DE STOPLICHTEN waren nog niet uitgevonden, toen op een zekeren dag twee vrienden een drukken verkeersweg wilden oversteken. „Laten wij eerst tot die veiligheidszone bij de tramrails gaan," zeide een van haar. Haar vriendin, die daarin weinig vertrouwen scheen te stellen, antwoordde: „Deze zonen waarborgen geen veiligheid, want er wordt maar al te dikwijls overheen gereden." „Je hebt gelijk," was het antwoord, „indien wij zeker van onze bescherming willen zijn, moeten wij onze veiligheid met ons medenemen." De laatste spreekster, die veel in den Bijbel studeerde, had zich dikwijls verwonderd over de bescherming, die Christus Jezus in zijn leven heeft ondervonden. Daardoor werd het haar duidelijk, dat waar bescherming alleen kan worden gevonden in dezelfde bewuste eenheid met den Vader, die de Meester onderwerps en waarmede hij ons tot voorbeeld strekte.

Hoe vaak ondervinden wij niet, dat een besef van veiligheid in het eigen denken dringend noodzakelijk is! In het rijk van de geestelijke werkelijkheid bestaat er niets, waartegen de schepselen Gods bescherming behoeven of waarvan zij bevrijding noodig hebben, want in Zijn koninkrijk bewegen allen zich in overeenstemming met Zijn wet en staan allen onder de nimmer falende leiding van het één Gemoed, dat geen enkel element van verwarren of vernietiging kent. In een sterfelijk, eindig begrip van het bestaan, evenwel, wordt het onjuiste geloof, dat er vele met elkaar in strijd zijnde gemoeden bestaan, die zich zoowel van het goede als van het kwade bewust zijn, aanvaard, en is het daarom raadzaam of zelfs noodzakelijk, zich aan bepaalde fundamentele waarheden vast te houden. Indien deze waarheden worden begrepen en in tijden van nood en gevaar worden toegepast, staan zij ons als de eenige betrouwbare middelen voor onze veiligheid ten dienste.

Een dezer waarheden, die de schrijver in moeilijke omstandigheden vertroost en beschermd heeft, vindt men in Spreuken (18:10): „De naam des Heeren is een sterke toren: de rechtvaardige zal daaraan loopen, en in een hoog vertrek gesteld worden." Volgens de uitlegging van een woordenboek kan het woord „naam" worden beschouwd en voorgesteld als „individualiteit" of „karakter." Wanneer wij onze toevlucht tot de goddelijke natuur nemen en bedenken, dat wij in werkelijkheid, door weerspiegeling, deze natuur zelf bezitten, dan zien wij, dat wij in een onaantastbare, geestelijke veiligheid verbleven. Van dit standpunt uit kunnen wij de bescherming beseffen, die voortkomt uit het begrip dat wij niet gescheiden zijn van de wijsheid van het Gemoed, van de onvernietigbaarheid van den Geest, de rust der Ziel, de onveranderlijkheid van het goddelijk Beginsel, de levenskracht van het Leven, de onoverwinnelijkheid der Waarheid en van de onuitputtelijkheid der Liefde. Het besef van de eenheid in ons wezen met den goddelijken naam of de goddelijke natuur verleent niet alleen bescherming tegen lichamelijke geweld, maar verlost ons tevens uit moeilijke omstandigheden, die ons in de verzoeking zouden kunnen brengen, iets, dat niet gelijk God is, met betrekking tot ons zelf of tot anderen, als waar te aanvaarden.

Een praktisch voorbeeld hiervan wordt in de geschiedenis van Daniël gevonden, die, hoewel hij zijn onwrikbare trouw aan God had bewezen, zich in een leeuwenkuil bevond. Toen de bezorgde koning Daniël den volgenden morgen ondervraagde, verklaarde deze, dat zijn behoud het gevolg was van zijn onschuld aan eenig vergrip tegenover God en den mensch. Voor een bewustzijn, dat te rein was om vrees of wrok te herbergen en daarom een onaantastbare veiligheid bood, moest de dierlijkheid van afgunst, jaloeziesheid en haat wel beschaamd en machteloos wegsliu- pen.

Vele eeuwen daarna, doorstond Christus Jezus zegenrijke de beproeving van de kruisiging en het graf. In Lucas wordt verhaald, dat de vervoeerde bewoners van Nazareth, Jezus van den top van een heuvel wilden werpen, „maar hij door het midden van hen doorgaan zijnde, ging weg" (Lucas 4:30). In gelijke bewoording geeft Johannes een beschrijving van de bescherming, die de Meester ondervond, toen, in een ander geval, het volk hem wilde steenigen, terwijl hij den tempel verliet. De Liefde, waarvan Jezus zich in deze onverwachte gebeurtenissen bewust was, werd door de Ontdekker en Grondlegger van de Christelijke Wetenschap, Mary Baker Eddy, in de volgende woorden duidelijk verklaard: „Christus geeft den onvernietigbaren mensch te zien, die door den Geest wordt geschapen, gevormd en bestuurd. Christus veranschouwt niet éénzinnig met God, zijn goddelijk Beginsel, hetwelk den mensch heerschappij geeft over de gehele aarde" (Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures [Wetenschap en Gezondheid met den Sleutel tot de Heilige Schrift], blz. 316). Door zich uit den stoflijken zin terug te trekken en in zijn geestelijke wezen eenheid of het geestelijk bewustzijn binnen te gaan, was de Meester met een zoo volkomen geestelijke bescherming uitgerust, dat het stoflijke geloof den lichamelijken Jezus niet kon waarnemen.

De een en negentigste Psalm geeft een volledige beschrijving van de volmaakte veiligheidszone, die te allen tijde van kracht is. Met de beloften voor bescherming en bevrijding, die hierin zijn vervat, gaat de voorwaarde gepaard, dat wij in bewuste eenheid met God moeten verwijlen en Hem tot onze woonplaats moeten maken. Deze gemoedsgeestelheid moet niet slechts van tijd tot tijd aanwezig zijn, maar moet, zolang dat bij den Meester het geval was, ononderbroken voortduren. In den Wereldoorlog I werd herhaaldelijk bewezen, dat ook in den tegenwoordigen tijd aan dezen eisch kan worden voldaan. De volgende getuigenis toont de juistheid hiervan aan. Een soldaat bleef rustig en veilig op zijn post, niettegenstaande deze plaats zoo gevaarlijk was, dat zij als „de Hellehoek" stond gebrandmerkt. Hij beschouwde deze plek evenwel niet als onveilig. Hij dacht er niet aan als „den Hellehoek", maar als „den Liefdehoek." Hij begreep dat de Liefde alomtegenwoordig is, daar God Liefde is. Deze erkenning van Gods beschermende tegenwoordigheid behoeft hem volkomen tegen alle gevaar.

Wij kunnen er in onzen tijd zeker van zijn, dat in het wereldwijde strijdperk ontelbaar velen beschermd zullen zijn tegen de zoogenaamde vernietigende machten, op dezelfde wijze, zolang dat hierboven is vermeld. Om in de verschillende vormen van de menscheijke noodten te voorzien, brengen deze geestelijke havens de oneindige verscheidenheid van het Gemoed, waarin zij hun oorsprong vinden, tot uitdrukking, terwijl zij in wezen één zijn, omdat zij in de eindloosheid slechts één feit en wel, de eeuwige onvernietigbaarheid van den mensch als de idee van den Geest, vertegenwoordigen. De mensch bestaat in onverbrekbare eenheid met God. In het heilighoud van de alomtegenwoordige Liefde vinden wij de vertrustende waarborg van 's menschen eeuwigdurende veiligheid.

The Sophisticated Lion of the Serengeti Plains

THE SERENGETI PLAINS spread from Lake Nyaraza, in Tanganyika, northward beyond the lower boundaries of Kenya Colony. They are the great sanctuary of the Masai People and they harbour more wild game than any similar territory in all of East Africa. In the season of drought they are as dry and tawny as the coats of the lion that prowls them, and during the rains they provide the benison of soft grass to all the animals in a child's picture book.

They are endless and they are empty, but they are as warm with life as the waters of a tropic sea. They are webbed with the paths of eland and wildebeest and Thompson's gazelle and their hollows and valleys are trampled by thousands of zebra. I have seen a herd of buffalo invade the pastures under the occasional thorn tree groves and, now and then, the whimsically fashioned figure of a plodding rhino has moved along the horizon like a grey boulder come to life and adventure bound. There are no roads. There are no villages, no towns, no telegraph. There is nothing, as far as you can see, or walk, or ride, except grass and rocks and a few trees and the animals that live there.

Years ago one of the banking Rothschilds on a hunting trip led by Captain George Wood, now aide-de-camp to His Royal Highness, the Duke of Windsor, pitched his tents in the Serengeti Plains near a huge pile of these rocks where there was protection from the wind and where there was water. Since then countless hunting parties on safari have stopped there, and Rothschild's Camp is still a landmark and a kind of haven for hunters who, coming so far, have for a while at least locked the comforts of the other world behind them.

There is no landing field at Rothschild's Camp, but there is a patch of ground flat enough to receive a plane if the wind is right and the pilot careful.

I have landed there often and usually I have seen lion in the path of my glide to earth. Sometimes they have moved like strolling dogs, indifferent and unhurried, or, upon occasion, they have taken time to pause and sit on their haunches, in cosy groups—males, females and cubs staring at the Avion with about the same expression one finds in the gold-framed family portraits of the Mauve Decade.

I do not suggest that the lion of the Serengeti have become so blasé about the modern explorer's motion-picture camera that their posing has already become a kind of Hollywoodian habit. But many of them have so often been bribed with... delicacies that it is sometimes possible to advance with photographic equipment to within thirty or forty yards of them, if the approach is made in an automobile. From "West With the Night," by BERYL MARKHAM. (Boston: Houghton Mifflin.)

It Is Necessary to Agree on Terms

IN AN AGE suspicious of the slogans of the past, and of the verbal symbols used to manipulate masses of men in the name of unbridled power, investigation of meaning becomes the sharpest instrument to carve out clarity of thought. We are becoming slowly aware of the possibility that certain philosophic problems are problems of intelligibility rather than problems of fact; that certain expressions of political ideals are ambiguous in reference, and merely serve to cluster the emotions of interested groups; that the solution of certain questions of public policy is seriously prejudiced by the very language in which these questions are formulated....

Whether we are philosophers or men in everyday life merely, before we can answer any question, we must know exactly what question we are trying to answer. Both in science and common sense, clear understanding of meaning is the first condition of the search for truth.—From the Preface by ALBERT WILLIAM LEVI, in "The Logic of Language," by JAMES MACKAYE. (Hanover, New Hampshire: Dartmouth College Publications.)

Everlasting Safety

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

BEFORE THE invention of traffic lights, two friends one day started to cross a busy boulevard. "Let's make our way to that safety zone by the car track," said one. "They afford no security," replied her friend skeptically. "They are too often invaded." "You are right," came the reply; "we must take our safety with us if we would be sure of protection." The latter speaker, an earnest student of the Bible, had often marvelled at the protection demonstrated in the life of Christ Jesus. She was learning that real security can be found only in the same conscious unity with the Father which the Master taught and exemplified.

How often in human experience is there urgent need for a sense of safety within one's own thinking! In the realm of spiritual reality there is nothing from which any of God's creatures need protection or deliverance, for in His kingdom all move in accord with His law, under the unerring direction of the one Mind, which knows no element of confusion or destruction. A mortal, finite sense of existence, however, accepting as it does the belief of many conflicting minds, conscious of both good and evil, finds it advisable, even imperative, to lay hold upon certain basic truths. These truths, when understood and applied in times of stress or danger, serve as the one dependable means of safety.

One such truth that has afforded comforting shelter to the writer in emergencies is given in Proverbs (18:10) thus: "The name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe." The word "name," according to one dictionary definition, may be "regarded as representing... individuality or character." As we take refuge, therefore, in the divine nature by remembering that it is in truth our own by reflection, we find ourselves established in an inviolable spiritual safety. Here we realize the security that comes from a sense of being inseparable from the wisdom of Mind, the indestructibility of Spirit, the calm of Soul, the immutability of divine Principle, the vitality of Life, the invincibility of Truth, the inexhaustibility of Love. Identification with the divine name or nature affords not only protection from physical violence, but release from the untoward circumstance that would tempt us to accept something unlike God as true, either of ourselves or of others.

A practical illustration of this point is seen in the case of Daniel, who, after unswerving allegiance to God, found himself in a den of lions. To the anxious king who questioned him the next morning, Daniel explained that his preservation resulted from his innocence of offense toward God and man. From the impregnable safety of a consciousness too pure to entertain either fear or resentment, the bestiality of envy, jealousy, and hate could only slink away, abashed and powerless.

Centuries later, Christ Jesus went triumphantly through the experiences of the cross and the tomb. It is recorded by Luke that the angry citizens of Nazareth once intended to cast Jesus off the brow of the hill, "but he passing through the midst of them went his way" (Luke 4:30). In similar language John describes the Master's protection from those who, in another instance, would have stoned him as he left the temple. The safety realized by Jesus in such emergencies is vividly portrayed by the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy, in these words (Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, p. 316): "Christ presents the indestructible man, whom Spirit creates, constitutes, and governs. Christ illustrates that blending with God, his divine Principle, which gives man dominion over all the earth." Withdrawal from material sense into his spiritual identity or consciousness provided the Master with a spiritual safety so complete that material belief could not behold the physical Jesus.

A complete and detailed description of the perfect safety zone is given for all time in the ninety-first Psalm. All its promises of protection and deliverance demand that we dwell in conscious oneness with God, that we make Him our habitation. This state of mind must, therefore, like that of the Master, be continuous, not intermittent. That such a requirement can be practically fulfilled today was proved again and again during the World War. One such testimony is on record regarding a soldier who remained safe and serene at a post so dangerous that it had been dubbed "Hell's Corner." This soldier did not accept the post as dangerous. He thought of it not as "Hell's Corner," but as "Love's Corner." To him Love was omnipresent, since God is Love. Acknowledgment of this sheltering presence gave to him perfect safety.

Today we may be sure that all along a world-wide battle front, countless numbers are finding sure safety from would-be destructive agencies in just such ways as these. To meet the varying aspects of the human need, these spiritual havens express the infinite variety of the Mind originating them; yet in essence they are all one, for they present in the last analysis but one fact, namely, the eternal indestructibility of man as the idea of Spirit. Man has indissoluble unity with God. In this sanctuary of omnipresent Love we find the comforting reassurance of man's everlasting safety.

Memo on India:

Problem Affecting All United Nations By Peter Lyne

London
While the British Government is refraining for the time being from official comment on proposals of various quarters in the United States for United Nations' guarantee of postwar independence for India, I've been given to understand that the basis of British reply to such proposals would be that in the British view mediation talk is based on the misconception that the All India Congress Party is open to mediation.

Any favorable reaction from India to the idea of a United Nations' guarantee is seen in London to have come not from the Congress Party but from various liberal-minded sections of Indian opinion.

It is stressed here that Mohandas K. Gandhi, Jawaharlal Nehru and other Congress Party spokesmen have stated they're not seeking any further guarantees of future freedom but are only interested in action now in giving India immediate independence. The Congress, it is pointed out here, hasn't suggested it would be more ready to accept Britain's promise if that promise had international backing.

International Interference

On the contrary, the Congress Party spokesmen have indicated there would be resentment of international interference in the Indian question. The demand that Britain quit India now doesn't include any qualification that United Nations authority would be any more acceptable.

Nevertheless in Britain generally there is sympathetic hearing for American voices calling for United Nations effort to solve the Indian problem. Many of Britain's ablest thinkers as well as far-seeing progressive politicians are today looking much more to United Nations approach to this thorniest of national problems.

The British Government has itself recognized that the defense of India is no longer merely a British or an Indian problem, but rather a problem affecting all of the United Nations—in fact, all nations actively fighting the Axis or psychologically opposed to its aims. The logical deduction from this is that it is just as much an affair of the United Nations as a whole to instigate mediation. And on this basis there are forceful sections of opinion in Britain as well as in the United States which, no matter how logical the British Government's stand against the Congress may seem to be, will continue to press the British Government to seek a new United Nations approach to solution of Indian impasse if the British Government itself doesn't see its way clear.

Exaggerated Impression

Meanwhile, in authoritative quarters here there's concern that the system of newspaper coverage of events in India by means of flash headlines, is liable to give an exaggerated impression of Indian rioting to date. Actually authorities here are agreeably surprised at the limited extent of disorders so far. The degree of discipline which the Moslems have shown to date is highly commended here. It suggests either that Mohammed Ali Jinnah has more power than was at one time calculated or else the Moslems are merely biding their time.

Telegrams received in London from Calcutta, where 60 per cent of India's war effort is concentrated, show few repercussions there to the civil disobedience campaign, I was authoritatively informed. Little political significance moreover is attached to closing of some of the jute mills which are due for seasonal decline of activity.

On the other hand those in London most closely concerned with Indian affairs don't fail to recognize the immense potential danger of the present situation. As one of my informants said, "Bombay is a bad place to throw a stone. A stone thrown by a Hindu always is liable to hit a Moslem with the possibility of losing an avalanche of communal riots between different religious sects which might spread like wildfire."

"That," he added, "is the tragedy of the Congress Party's irresponsibility in creating the present situation."

Glider Backbone of America's Air-Borne Army

Pilots being trained for Commando thrusts from sky at enemy's vital defenses.

By Albert D. Hughes
Aviation Editor of
The Christian Science Monitor

"The air-borne army will exceed anything of the kind the world has yet known."

Lieut.-Gen. Henry H. Arnold, Chief of the American Air Force, set a goal and a purpose when he uttered these words launching the glider training program.

A visit to any of the several glider training schools—Twenty Nine Palms, Calif., in the desert; Amarillo, Texas, in the sagebrush Panhandle country, or Mobile, Ala., on the sandy Gulf Coast, for example, conveys the earnestness of the Troop Carrier Command—as the glider force is known.

The intense, serious, and quiet activity shown in the glider training program at once gives the beholder the feeling that the Air Force is planning to make the glider force—carrying both troops and supplies—into a smoothly working unit of a well-integrated machine that is going to convey the real meaning of "blitzkrieg" to Hitler and his cohorts.

When the right time comes, you feel, watching the tow planes take off with several gliders, that enemy skies will be filled with American gliders carrying all the elements an air-borne army needs—its own fully-armed troops equipped with light weapons, vehicles, supplies, light artillery, and field equipment for an invasion.

Natural features that have bothered surface armies, mountains, water stretches, mud, snow, jungle, are no problem to an air-borne army. The flying soldier and quartermaster will cross these stretches with ease, forming a necessary link between the ground and air elements.

Surprise Element

Make no mistake about the apparently sedentary job of a glider pilot. He has none of the motor, prop, and fuel problems to which a powdered pilot is continually alert. Yet he will be in the forefront of the invasion spearhead. He will be the surprise element of the occupation forces.

Though a glider is comparatively easy to handle, the pilot must have a great amount of co-ordination and level-headedness. In his success in reaching the ground intact may depend the fate of the surprise thrust.

Near Amarillo on the flat plains is a temporary advanced glider school, one of the AAF's many glider schools. Here pilots round out their training in this newest branch of the Air Force.

Candidates come to Amarillo from numerous primary glider schools where for four weeks they have been operating converted cub airplanes without engines. Here, however, they get the real "thing"—two weeks' training in aerodynamically designed gliders ranging from two-place ships up to giants with wing spans approaching those of four-motored bombers.

Gliding as it is taught here is not the super-refined art of the soaring pilot. There are opportunities to soar, of course, but the military version is similar to the performance of a roller-coaster car after it reaches the top of the incline—it coasts downward only. The soaring pilot, in contrast, has very high lift and elongated span wings designed to get the most lift out of cloud, thermal and ridge currents.

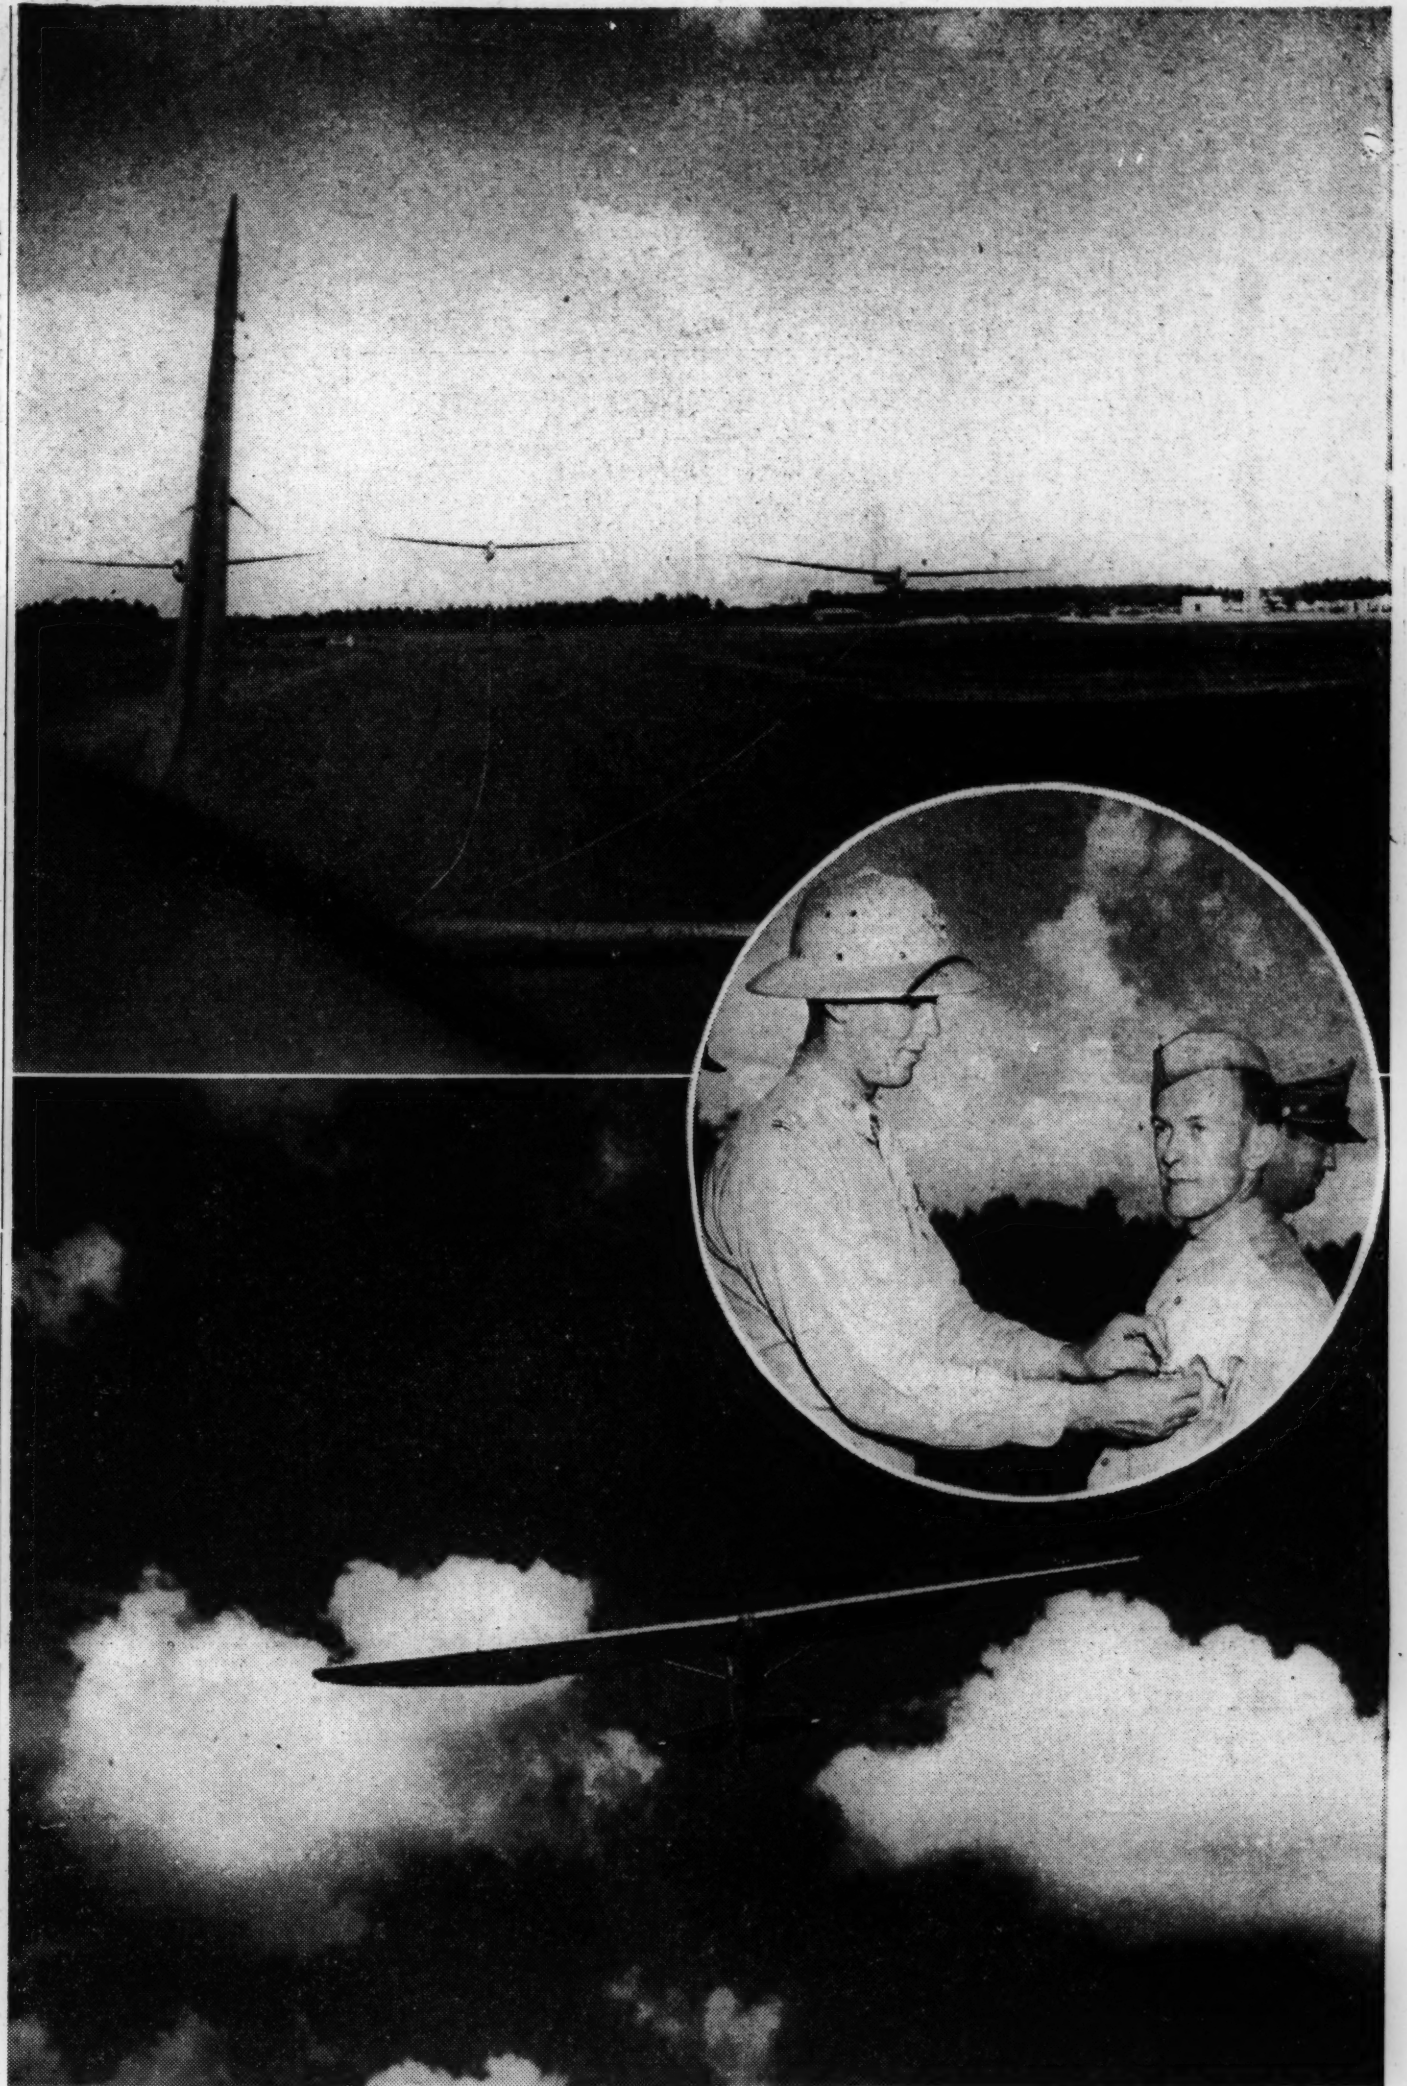

Flight instruments—air speed, turn and bank, rate of climb and an altimeter—adorn a glider panel in contrast to the multitudinous flight and engine instruments which are on a powered plane's panel.

'Brakes' on Wings

Besides its flight controls, one of the valuable "brakes" on a glider are the "spoilers"—little trap doors on the upper surface of each wing which, when opened, break up the air flow and cause immediate loss of lift. Thus, the glider rapidly loses altitude without loss of speed.

The instructor and students climb into a multi-place glider and one of the ground crew comes up with the end of a tow rope fastened to the tail of the tow plane and hooks a little ring to a patented release on the nose of the glider. Then the tow plane picks up the slack so that when the glider starts moving it does so without a jerk.

Several tow lines of varying lengths are played out on the field also connected to other gliders in the same flight. This is so that the individual gliders will not get in one another's way

Wide World

Air-Borne Army Trains Swiftly

At Mobile, Ala., is located one of the several Army Glider Schools where the elements of an air-borne army are being rapidly trained. Top photo shows a glider tow, looking back over the tail of the tow plane. Note that the gliders rise from the ground first. In the circle Capt. Carl Luetcke is pinning a glider pilot's wings onto a graduate. Bottom, a glider shown at 3,000 feet just about to cast loose from its tow line.

and there is no possibility of fouling one another.

When the parachute-laden student pilot has been checked off at the dispatcher's table on the field, he climbs in, an enlisted man aids in locking up the plexiglass enclosure, and then lifts the wing tip off the ground holding it level so that when the tow plane moves the glider will be in flight attitude.

After each enlisted man drops his arm, indicating that his glider is ready, the tow pilot guns his ship, pulling the gliders after him. Gliders rise first, usually about 15 feet off the ground to keep the tow line taut. Then the tow plane takes off and gains altitude.

All glider pilots stay well to one side of the tow plane so as not to be caught in the rough air caused by the propeller. The tow plane rises several thousand feet and then the pilot waggles the tail of his plane or waves as a signal to cast off. There is a snapping as glider pilots pull release levers. The tow plane immediately heads back for the field where it releases the tow line to the ground crew and then lands preparatory to taking on another tow. This activity is incessant.

The released gliders stay aloft often for several minutes if the pilots are soloing, practicing turns, stalls, slips and spins. Eventually they head downwind and toward the field. Two men stand with flags on the field on each end of a mythical line to which every pilot has been instructed to roll. The glider approaches using a series of "S" turns making an approach somewhat like a sea gull. Sometimes he sidesteps in slightly and having picked the right moment he comes down in low and, if his control is good, lands on the little rubber nose wheel. The little glider sails right along on level keel and dips one wing gently as it comes to a stop.

Training also includes night flying with the field outlined by smudge pots.

Besides the 17½ hours of flight, each pilot gets a 30-hour ground course including meteorology (a most important study in gliding), characteristics and flying technique of gliders, link trainer (flying training device), communications, maintenance and physical training.

Many candidates of course, never have seen any phase of flying, hence they start with a 10-week course including eight weeks' instruction in light planes, of which three weeks is with "dead stick" (powerless) landings to get the feel of glider flying.

In ground school, the pre-glider student learns how to identify flying conditions from maps as well as the sky; studies cloud formations, and knows how to select the friendly cumulus clouds which can give him the extra precious "lift" he may need; and orientation, the difference, for instance, between "true" north and "compass" north.

Since an important part of a glider corps' role continues on the ground, the student gets strict disciplinary training, and athletics to toughen him for the strenuousness of the task he has selected.

While one group of preglider students is attending ground school, another group is flying.

Students are taken up through motored flying, then to "dead stick," a primary school, thence to actual gliding in advanced school.

At the conclusion of his advanced training, and the pilot receives the precious "wings" to wear on his jacket and is assigned to a troop-carrier command. From there on he will have a larger objective. He eventually will have an opportunity to visit certain countries, and not as a "tourist."

Care for Children Of Work Mothers

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (P)—The War Manpower Commission declared yesterday "the first responsibility of women with young children, in war as in peace, is to give suitable care in their own homes to their children."

At the same time, Paul V. McNutt, Commission Chairman, called for the development and co-ordination of Federal programs for the day care of children of working mothers.

"In order that established family life may not be unnecessarily disrupted," the policy statement said, "special efforts to secure the employment in industry of women with young children should be deferred until full use has been made of all other sources of labor supply."

The Country Speaks: Chicago

A Questionable Question By Ralph W. Cessna

"Why aren't you in uniform?"

One popular pastime among the pre-Pearl Harbor isolationists in this region is an attempt to impugn—by implication—the patriotism or the courage or the sincerity, or something, of those pre-Pearl Harbor nonisolationists who are not yet wearing some uniform of the armed services.

The formula is to point to several of their own pre-Pearl Harbor isolationist colleagues, such as Generals Hammond and Wood, who have gone into service, and ask why so-and-so, "prominent warmonger" (meaning of course nonisolationist), hasn't volunteered to go over to Europe to fight Hitler now that we're at war.

A well-known isolationist newspaper here, for example, has at various times recently used its news columns for such discussions. In other cases, private citizens, pre-Pearl Harbor isolationist mothers whose own sons have patriotically volunteered, have looked askance at nonisolationists who still walk about in civilian clothes.

The fact seems to be that there are just as many on either side who are not in uniform, just as many who are. Those pre-Pearl Harbor isolationists, for example, are very careful not to call attention to Paul Douglas, ardent "interventionist," who now, in spite of his age (50) is in the uniform of a Marine private. They don't mention that Generals Wood and Hammond are not in combat service. They overlook the hundreds of eligible persons in their own ranks who are not in uniform.

They disregard in their criticism the many very good reasons why certain persons are not in uniform. There's the matter of age. The armed services have something to say about who they'll accept. And age is one of the things they're particular about (in spite of the exception in the case of Mr. Douglas). There's the matter of physical condition. There's the matter of whether one's family could under realistic conditions be sustained without public aid.

There's the matter, too—very important, and not given enough consideration—of whether one is not doing in his private-citizen capacity as much or more good in the war effort than he might be in shouldering a rifle. There are men in professions not officially recognized as warranting deferment who are doing indirect but substantial and positive good. Many not in uniform, not even in one of the vital war jobs, are doing work indispensable to national morale, making sacrificial contributions to the future peace.

And anyway, how do these pre-Pearl Harbor folks who criticize those on the other side not in uniform know whether or not those people have not earnestly tried to get into uniform?

Are all those, who by reason of health or age or work or family status are prevented from shouldering a gun, to be precluded from discussing politics, from taking sides actively on world affairs? The conclusion to be drawn from the actions of these critics is that anyone who dared before Pearl Harbor to take the view that the nation was in danger and should act aggressively to protect itself must now, regardless of health or age or family status or value in present jobs, rush out and shoulder a gun.

It's not the General Woods, though, who make such criticisms. It's not the Hoovers. Fortunately, there were many of those pre-Pearl Harbor isolationists who were not only patriotic and honest and sincere, but also clear enough in their thinking to see through the absurdity that (1) all nonisolationists wanted war, and (2) that waving the flag and carrying a gun is the only way to prove one's desire to serve his nation and mankind.

To Change the Subject:

They Called Them 'Minutemen' at Concord By Josephine Ripley

The memory of it is still vivid. A sloping hillside. Men sitting about, some in uniform, some in overalls, their heels dug into the bank, faces tanned and set.

It had been like this in other lands—green fields, quiet, sun-flooded, peaceful. Fields where meadowlarks built their nests and farmers garnered their grain.

Fields where tomorrow—maybe tonight—heavy boots might crush the nest of the lark, and the farmer's grain go down under the churning tread of tanks.

Of course, we were only pretending then. The men gathered here were not members of a real guerrilla band. They belonged to the State Guard of Massachusetts, but they were learning guerrilla tactics just the same, in the first school of its kind in the United States.

Veteran of Guerrilla Warfare

We of the press had been guests that day. In the background stood other guests—a Chinese colonel, veteran of guerrilla warfare at 36; a former director of the British Home Guard; and beside him an officer of the coast command in England.

These men had seen it happen, and they watched closely as the instructor called for five men for a patrol mission. They stood at attention for inspection. There must be no letter of identification in their pockets—not a scrap of identification. No shiny object to reflect the sun and give away their position. Not a pin's weight in extra equipment.

Their objective was the opposite hill where the enemy was thought to be entrenched. Their mission, to locate his position, report his strength. They crept away, now running, now dropping behind cover, alert, sure-footed. There could be no slips on a mission of this kind.

Later, from another hillside we watched the entire class, as it worked out a similar "problem," while instructors on an observation platform above us fired their rifles in warning if the patrols seemed to expose themselves too frequently.

In the lecture hall afterward we regretted that the slim, youthful Chinese colonel could not address us in English. Through his interpreter, and vigorous blackboard language in red arrows and blue circles, we saw the invading Japanese hordes break like a flood over the rice paddies of China, rushing down its railways, swirling through its cities.

We saw the formation of one of the most remarkable organizations in history—the Chinese guerrillas. We saw every able-bodied man, every woman, every child given a job to do. We saw the organization of guerrilla districts, guerrilla bases within the districts, guerrilla bands within the bases. No one was exempted. Nothing was left to chance. It was a machine in which every part functioned.

There were children innocently dropping matches on their way to school. Women at the market place, watching, listening as they walked among the enemy. Men going to work in factories with harmless looking pencils in their pockets. Pencils filled with TNT.

There were swift midnight stabs at enemy concentrations, swift withdrawals. Hit-and-run, night after night, giving the enemy no rest, wrecking his lines of communication over and over again.

Always in the midst of enemy lines. Never surrendering, never submitting, always resisting, always striking, always resisting, always striking. Sometimes here, sometimes there.

"It is the spirit of the people," declared the colonel, "which counts in guerrilla warfare."

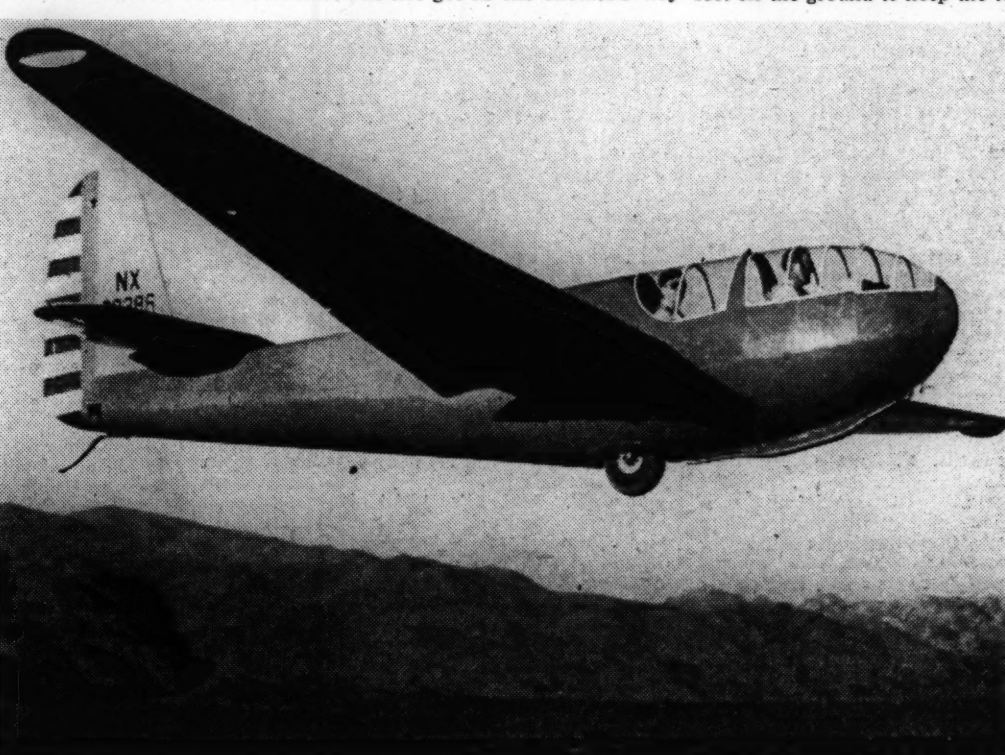

Queen Speaks to Congress

Almost at this same moment, a Queen was speaking to Congress. "What would be the American answer," she asked, "if an invader tried to cover his wholesale systematic pillage with the firing squad, the concentration camp and the abomination of the hostage practice?"

"I doubt not that your answer would be resistance, resistance until the end, resistance in every practicable shape or form."

"This is exactly the answer my people have given, and are giving every day." It was the Queen of the Netherlands speaking.

I look around the News Room here trying to picture myself and my colleagues as guerrillas. It is difficult, yet not impossible. As the general had said in a few concluding words to the school, with a twinkle in his eye. "We New Englanders, with Cape Cod pirates and Salem witches for ancestors, should have no trouble in adapting ourselves to guerrilla warfare." No, we have only to look back into our own history—all of us—to know what we should do if the enemy came here.

Insurance Field Awaits Fire Inquiry With Mingled Feelings

By Harold Fleming

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK—As the stock fire insurance companies face the Grand Jury investigation in Atlanta, the whole insurance industry, including even the life people, face the outlook with mingled feelings.

Some of the fire insurance people appear to be almost relieved that the cloudburst has at last come. Anti-trust investigation of fire insurance has been rumored, talked, and anticipated ever since the life insurance industry went on the grill some years ago.

For doubters in the fire insurance industry who thought they were still under the protection of the 73-year-old Paul vs. Virginia Supreme Court decision, which ruled that insurance is not interstate commerce, the handwriting on the wall should have been visible last Spring when an Anti-trust agent sounded off against the companies for their low loss ratios (percentage of cash paid out for fire losses against amount paid in as premiums) and wound up with the interesting assumption that there must be something exorbitant about the situation because the companies were able to earn six per cent on their money.

Other fire insurance executives do not seem to be so pleased. The companies are going to have to submit tons of evidence. The whole inside of their business is likely to be exposed to the public gaze by Government agents who are notorious for their ability to make things look as bad as possible. And there are many things in the fire insurance industry which can be dressed up by critics to look pretty bad, involving rates, allowances to agents, and so forth.

The whole investigation is said to have stemmed from an unsavory episode in Missouri a few years ago involving the apparent bribery, but apparently unwitting, by some companies of some Missouri officials. These companies are currently charged with suppressing competition, fixing rates and commissions, and otherwise conspiring in restraint of trade through the network of bureaus and associations with which the fire insurance industry is organized.

These are of course standard charges to which standard answers will be joined. One of the answers is that state insurance commissioners largely control the rates and commissions, and another is that the agents are powerfully organized and sometimes force commissions on the companies. But it appears that the process of charge and answer, new charge and new answer, will not help the companies with the public. The industry faces the same public relations troubles through which numerous other industries have been dragged in recent years and in particular the life companies two years ago.

Do Good Job

Fortunately for the companies, they have just completed a highly commendable piece of public-spirited action in the non-profit handling of the enormous bulk of the recent bombardment insurance. In the short space of about a month the companies got through the enormous volume of paper work involved in the placing of bombardment insurance probably equal in premiums and coverage to the total of outstanding fire insurance.

Burning the midnight oil, they did it under rules and regulations of the War Relocation Corporation which strictly limited the fees so that the companies could make no profit, but only expenses out of the operation. In addition, the companies did yeoman service to WDC in helping to work out the complicated rules and regulations and make the public familiar with them. WDC was wholly unequipped for this task, being little more than a name on a door in the RFC's growing aggregation of proliferated subsidiaries.

While the fire insurance companies are about to go on the grid, the life companies are sitting comparatively pretty as to public relations. Not only is TNEC over and gone, but saving, for which the life companies were so severely condemned, has again become a public virtue and the companies are able to point to huge purchases of Government bonds out of premium income.

Further than that, their agents have voluntarily and without recompense already sold over $1,000,000,000 of Treasury war bonds. More than that, time and tide are softening the more publicity-wide objectionable features of life insurance, like industrial insurance and high lapse and surrender rates. Lastly, the companies have embarked on a very extensive health program which not only has obtained substantial commendation from Washington, but also represents virtually the first occasion on which the entire industry has achieved complete co-operation.

Industrial Sales Drop
Industrial insurance sales have been declining for several reasons. For one thing the companies have been shifting the emphasis away from them, if only because they do not stand very high in public favor.

Social Security has probably taken another bite out of them. More important is the fact that pay rolls are up about 60 per cent since the defense program started. This has had a double effect in shifting buyers from industrial to ordinary insurance.

In the first place the family with a $1,500 income is now up around a $2,500 income, which means it is out of the industrial insurance class. Even more important is that industrial income is now much steadier.

Chief buyers of industrial insurance were families with irregular or uncertain income. There is now much more regular. A curious side-result is that the agents who once sold industrial insurance are better fitted to sell ordinary insurance to the new customers than the agents who once sold in the higher brackets which are now heavily hit by taxes, and who are not used to talking life insurance round the kitchen table.

The income change which has lifted industrial insurance into the class of buyers of ordinary insurance presents the companies with a very large question mark in the future outlook. Enormous amounts of money are now accruing in pay rolls to people who never saved money and never had bank accounts.

Evidence of this is the Treasury's concern over the quarterly income tax payments, and further evidence lies in the vast increase in "money in circulation," which consists of folding money not put in the bank. As the supply of goods on which this money can be spent gradually disappears, these people will either buy war bonds, or speculate in real estate, or perhaps buy insurance (in which case the money will go into government bonds anyway through company investments).

These things are also helping the companies to cut down substantially the rate of lapse and surrender. Absence of depression except in a comparatively few industries also contributes substantially. A further reason is that the insurance taken out after 1930 was much more conservatively taken and therefore less subject to a change of intention on the part of the policyholder.

Newspaper Zinc Reclaiming Plan Approved by WPB

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (AP)—A zinc reclaiming plan under which newspapers and other publications using photo engravings made of the strategic metal may turn it over and over again, has been approved by the War Production Board.

George C. Heikes, chief of the board's zinc branch, estimated that the publications, instead of using 50 per cent of their last year's volume of the metal, to which they were reduced by a recent order, will use only 10 to 15 per cent of new zinc under the plan. Official modification of the earlier order was expected soon.

Under the new plan the publications' scrap metal will be sent to secondary smelters, from which it will emerge in an almost pure state. There it will be rolled to the proper thickness and again be useful in making engravings and newspaper "cuts."

Mr. Heikes said a high percentage of newspaper scrap zinc can be reclaimed.

Slot Machines Paying Big Taxes To U. S. Treasury

WASHINGTON (AP)—Although pin-ball games and slot machines are illegal in a large part of the United States, the Treasury disclosed that more than 238,000 are in operation and paying federal taxes.

The count was made in totaling returns from new taxes imposed by Congress last fall on pin-ball and other "coin-operated amusement devices" at the rate of $10 a year and on slot machines and other "coin-operated gaming devices" at the rate of $50 a year. As of June 30, the tax had been paid on 160,894 machines in the pin-ball class and 77,129 in the slot machine group.

The Treasury is not required to know the local laws involved in operating these machines. The officials, however, have been getting numerous requests from religious and reform organizations for lists of persons paying the taxes in allegedly forbidden territories.

The Treasury has replied in each case that the lists are open to the public in the offices of the various collectors of internal revenue "at the convenience of the collectors."

Every State, the District of Columbia, Alaska and Hawaii are on the tabulation made public by the Treasury. New York led in the pin-ball class with 22,143; Wisconsin in the slot machine group with 7,247. Oklahoma is at the bottom of the list, with 33 machines in the pin-ball class and 14 in the slot machine group.

Connecticut River Power Co.

By the Associated Press
The Connecticut River Power Company reported net earnings, before interest expense and other fixed charges, for the six months ended June 30 were $999,385, equivalent to 2.04 times such charges. The figure compared with $1,129,450, equivalent to 2.27 times the charges, for the corresponding period of 1941.

Tax Measure Decisions Put Over to Aug. 24

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (AP)—

Senator Walter George (D) of Georgia announced today that the Senate Finance Committee would begin work revising the bill behind closed doors Aug. 24. He said he hoped this work could be completed in a week, adding that the time required for subsequent technical drafting of amendments would depend on the changes voted.

In any event, he hoped to have the bill before the Senate not later than Sept. 15, with passage expected about 10 days later. Some members thought that if extensive changes were made, the Senate and House might not be able to agree on the final form of the measure until November, possibly after the elections.

Treasury Report

Senator George said the Treasury had been asked to submit to the Finance Committee estimates of the effect on revenues of proposed postwar tax rebates for corporations as well as debt reduction credits for individuals.

Indicating that he would be guided largely by the net effect on the revenue of such proposals, Senator George said it seemed imperative to soften the impact of high income levies written into the new tax bill before it passed the House.

"I am convinced by responsible and trustworthy testimony before the committee that the rates of the House bill require the establishment of some form of debt reduction and postwar credit for both individuals and corporations," Senator George told reporters.

The House-approved bill would add $6,271,000,000 to yearly federal revenues, a large portion of this amount being obtained through substantially increased income taxes on individuals and business firms.

Individual rates would range from 19 to 88 per cent on net income, while corporations would pay a combined total of 45 per cent in normal and surtax levies, with excess profits taxed at 90 per cent.

Refund Proposed

The Treasury itself has proposed return of 10 per cent of the excess profits tax collections to corporations after the war, and Senator George and others have indicated interest in broadening this principle to include individuals.

The debt deduction proposal would permit individuals to subtract from their tax liability money they paid on what might be called "capital" debts, such as installments on a home mortgage or the payment of insurance premiums.

The postwar rebates would not affect the amount of money the Treasury would take in immediately, since it would obtain cash anyway in the form of a loan, but debt deductions would cut revenues by the amount allowed for that purpose.

Deferment Planned For Copper Miners

WASHINGTON (AP)—The War Production Board reported that Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of Selective Service, intended to have deferred from military service all persons engaged in copper mining "who are found by local boards to be essential to copper production."

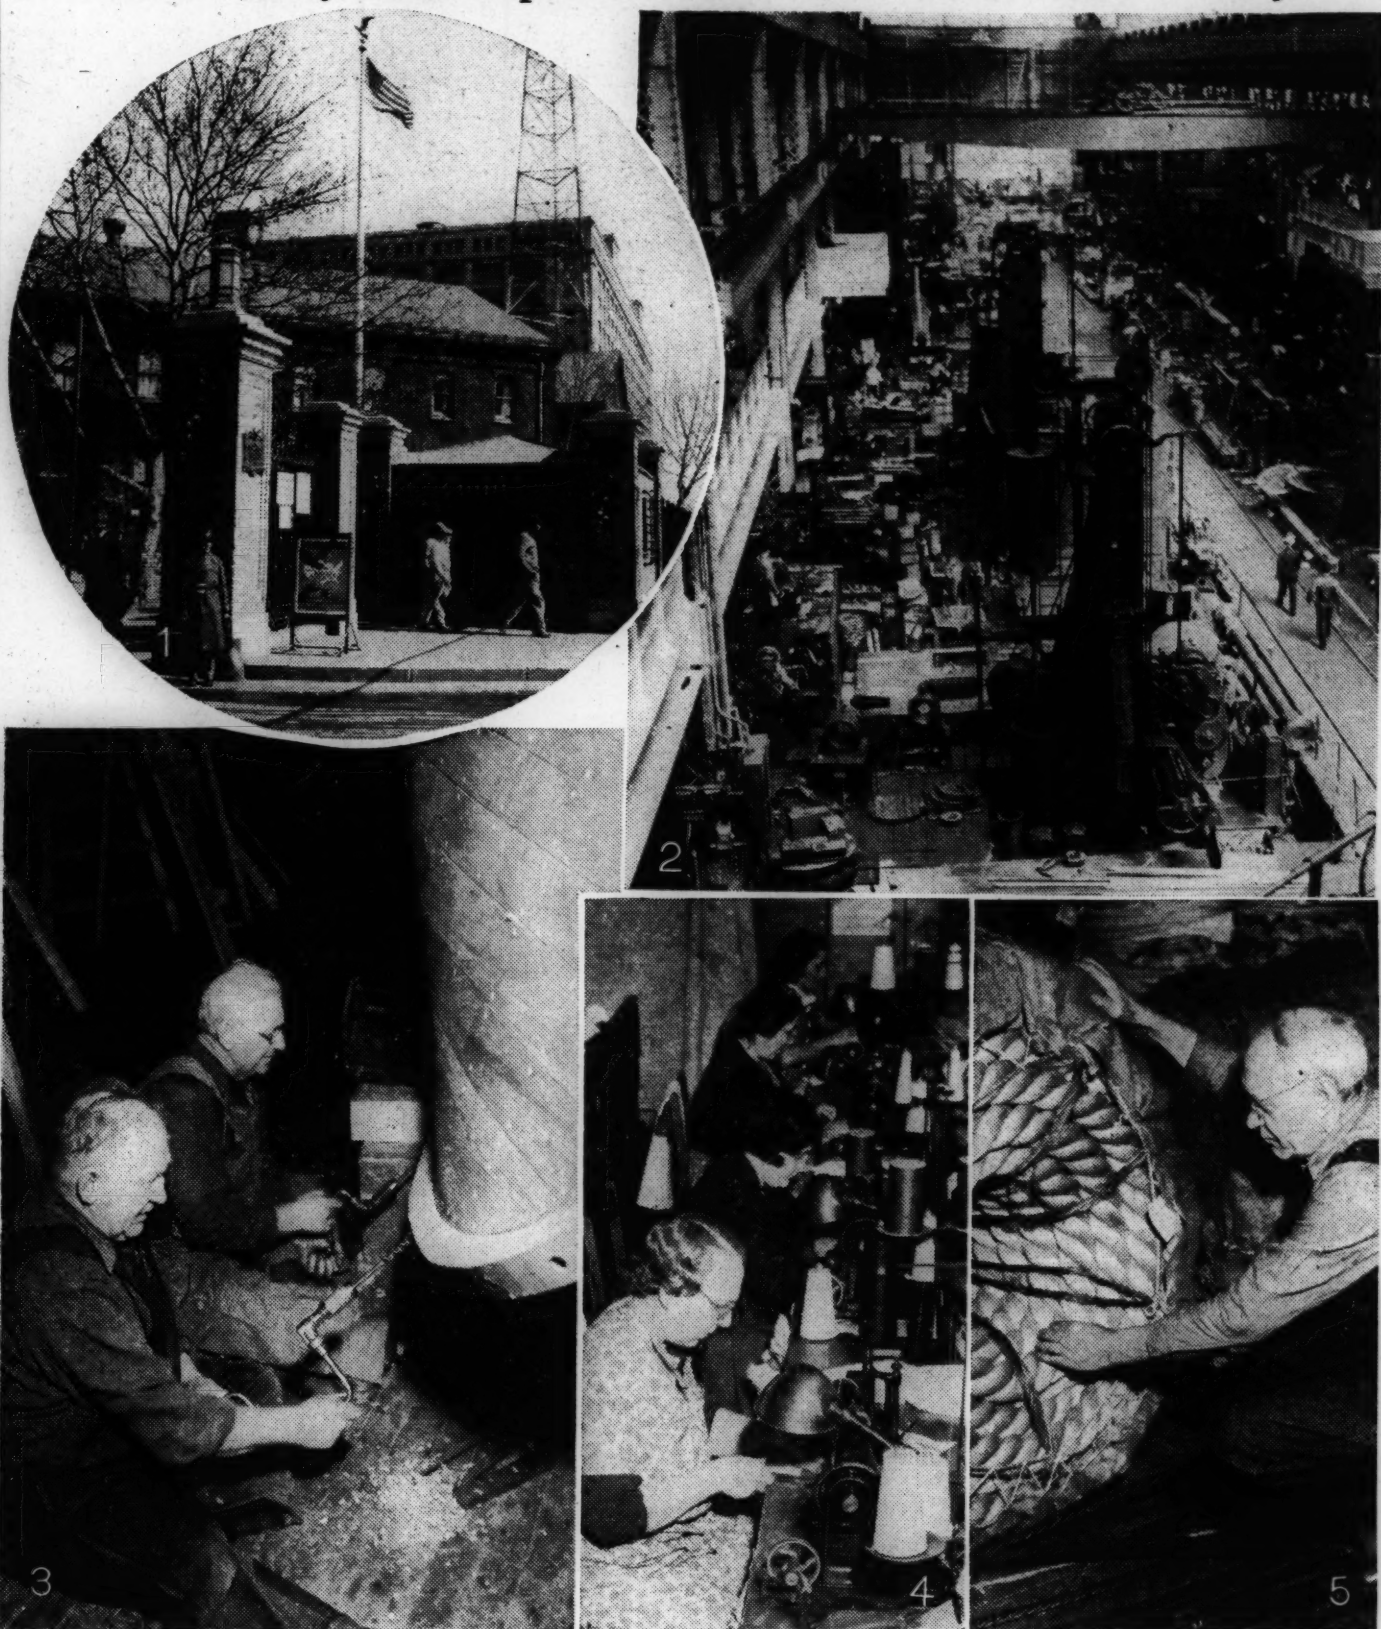

Domestic copper production in July could have been 5,000 tons higher if sufficient labor had been available at the mines, the WPB said.

Members of the Copper Industry Advisory Board told Harry O. King, chief of the WPB copper branch, that selective service had taken as high as 20 per cent of the labor force in some mines.

They also reported that shipyards, aircraft plants and military construction projects were offering wages with which copper miners could not compete, and that until recently productive efforts per miner had lagged.

"The productive effort," they added, "had improved sharply with the realization by the miners of the importance of their work in the war effort."

Retail Sales 7 to 14 P. C. Under '41 Week

NEW YORK (AP)—Retail sales increased during the past week, Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., reported, noting that cash trade was accounting for more business than credit.

Improved volume of apparel sales contrasted with a lag in housewares, the mercantile agency reported.

"Stores in rural sections and neighborhood retailers in war towns were benefiting most from the increase of incomes," the report said. It added that the loss of durable goods volume was a pronounced factor in the general down trend.

Compared with the corresponding week of 1941, dollar volume of retail sales was down 7 to 14 per cent, with large city department stores reporting the sharpest declines.

By regions, New England sales were 8 to 12 per cent below a year ago, the decline in the East was 11 to 17 per cent, Middle West 7 to 10, South 4 to 8, Southwest 7 to 15, Northwest 10 to 16, and Pacific Coast 5 to 9.

Wholesale markets, meanwhile, found the smaller stores relatively active buyers and dollar volume, swelled by price increases, was running close to 1941 figures.

Redemptions of War Bonds Seen Minor

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Treasury said that "redemptions of war savings bonds have been insignificant in volume, compared either with the total amount outstanding or with month-by-month sales."

In July, a statement said, the public turned in $25,500,000 worth of bonds for cash, which was 0.23 per cent of the $11,077,800,000 worth of savings bonds sold since 1935, or about 3 per cent of the $900,900,000 worth of new war bonds sold during the same month.

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Federal Reserve Board reported that loans to brokers and dealers on securities held by reporting member banks in New York City totaled $418,000,000 in the week ended Aug. 13, a decrease of $16,000,000 compared with the previous week.

Loans for the corresponding week a year ago totaled $328,000,000.

Shutdown of 'Dawn Patrol' Radio Programs Proposed to Save Material

WASHINGTON (AP)—A shutdown of midnight-to-dawn radio programs is one of a half dozen suggestions submitted to Chairman James L. Fly of the Federal Communications Commission in response to his request for proposals to save scarce materials in the broadcasting industry, a War Production Board spokesman said.

Another suggestion advanced by the spokesman was that FCC authorize the complete closure of some or all of an estimated 100 stations reportedly operating at a financial loss.

The ideas were offered by Leighton H. Peebles, chief of the WPB communications branch, but the spokesman emphasized they have no standing as a WPB proposal and have not been drafted even tentatively as a proposed order.

Another suggestion advanced by Mr. Peebles was that of staggering broadcasting hours or days. This was explained as an arrangement under which one station in a large city could go on the air for two hours, then close, while another station broadcast for two hours, and so on. In the evening, if all stations had sustaining programs scheduled, all these stations might broadcast simultaneously.

A variant of this plan was the suggestion that stations broadcast on alternate days, one taking the air Monday, another Tuesday, and so throughout the week.

The elimination of "dawn patrol" programs, which are usually made up of record playing, would serve the purpose of saving transmitting tubes, thereby conserving materials and equipment.

Engineering Awards 119 P. C. Over 1941

NEW YORK (AP)—Engineering construction awards in the week ended Aug. 11 rose 22 per cent above the preceding period and topped last year's total by 119 per cent, Engineering News-Record reported.

A tabulation of the awards showed:

	Wk. Aug. 13	Prev. Wk.	Last Yr.
Total	$200,600,000	$163,973,000	$91,586,000
Private	10,880,000	8,274,000	16,491,000
Public	189,710,000	155,699,000	75,095,000

For the month of July the publication reported total construction awards of $1,201,526,000, compared with $968,938,000 in June and $958,663,000 in July, 1941.

Lumber Supply Shortage Held Critical By WPB

WASHINGTON (AP)—The War Production Board described shortages of lumber supplies as "critical," disclosing that the total military and essential civilian lumber requirements this year would run some 6,000,000,000 board feet beyond anticipated production.

To head up Government efforts to handle the situation, WPB appointed Ben Alexander of Lake Forest, Ill., President of the Masonite Corporation of Chicago, to work closely with all WPB agencies handling lumber supply matters. Mr. Alexander also was ordered to co-operate with the armed services, the Maritime Commission, the War Manpower Commission, the Office of Price Administration and other Government agencies to insure that essential lumber requirements are filled.

WPB said the lumber situation had grown more serious recently because of problems of labor supply and as a result of increasing demands for wood as a metal substitute.

On the other hand, public deposits declined more than $3,000,000 and other securities were down $1,000,000.

The proportion of the bank's reserve to liability this week stood at 24.5 per cent compared with 7.5 the same week a year ago.

Note Circulation Rises in England

LONDON (AP)—Note circulation of the Bank of England increased slightly more than £1,000,000 in the week ended Aug. 12, reaching the record high of £834,473,000, the condition statement disclosed.

The new rise was the eighth consecutive weekly increase reported by the bank but the smallest of any during that period. The boost in the preceding week, for instance, was £9,000,000.

Private deposits and Government securities also rose sharply, with gains of more than £6,000,000 and £5,000,000, respectively.

On the other hand, public deposits declined more than £3,000,000 and other securities were down £1,000,000.

The proportion of the bank's reserve to liability this week stood at 24.5 per cent compared with 7.5 the same week a year ago.

Grange Leader Urges Steps To Halt Inflation

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15 (AP)—Albert S. Goss, Master of the National Grange, advised the nation today that the first step to halt inflation should be to "freeze everything temporarily."

Mr. Goss, in a prepared radio address, said "some mistakes have been made which threaten to break down our whole price control program," and recommended steps to halt inflation, including these:

1—Freeze everything temporarily, including wages.

2—Recognize the fact that it will be necessary for all to accept somewhat lower standards of living.

3—Abandon the idea that all increased living costs must be accompanied by increased income.

4—Permit necessary price adjustments, up or down, where profits are excessive.

5—Permit adjustments of sub-standard wages or cases where injustices or inequities are shown, but not to exceed 2½ per cent annually in the general wage level.

The grange master also advised a comprehensive research into the question "of a practical base for determining that portion of the national income which should in justice go to industry, labor and agriculture."

"Use cash subsidies only as a last resort," said Mr. Goss. "If they become necessary, let them be applied at the point of processing or distribution where profits and prices can be kept under rigid control."

Mr. Goss said adjustments in ceilings must be made to "avoid strangling production," adding: "These adjustments must be absorbed by the public. This will take sacrifice and courage, but any other course will lead to disaster. The increased costs of consumer goods will lower our standards of living somewhat, but if profiteering is eliminated and labor also brought within the scope of price control, the increase will not be excessive and our present level of income will be ample to meet it."

English Interest Payment on RFC Loan $38,928,797

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones has announced that during the 12 months ended July 31, England paid $38,928,797 interest and principal on its $390,000,000 loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Of the payments, $37,515,383 represented interest, dividends and other income received from the various securities and other collateral posted by England with the New York Federal Reserve Bank. Another $1,413,414 came from the sale of a small amount of the collateral.

Mr. Jones revealed that although the RFC authorized loans up to $425,000,000, $35,000,000 of the authorization has not been dispersed. England borrowed the money to pay for part of its war purchases in this country prior to receiving lend-lease assistance.

Complete List of Odd Lot and Inactive Issues on the New York Stock Exchange Is Published Every Thursday.

Some Stocks Show Gain In Quiet Market

NEW YORK, Aug. 15 (AP)—Selected stocks continued to edge forward in today's market, but many leaders seemed to have pretty well exhausted their recovery power.

Bullish sentiment still was bolstered by reports of American progress in the battle of the Solomons although these were offset to some extent as a market factor by the cloudier war picture in Russia.

The general direction of the list was upward at the start and, near the final hour, modest advances were in the majority. Dealings were slow.

In front at one time or another were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Motors, Chrysler, Santa Fe, Warner Bros., Homestake Mining, Montgomery Ward, Kennecott, Patino Mines, Westinghouse and Du Pont. Texas & Pacific Railway topped a new 1942 high, along with Ohio Oil and Borden.

The buoyant aircraft of yesterday, unchanged to a standstill. Unchanged to a standstill. Southern Pacific, Western Union, American Telephone and American Water Works.

Bond Market Quiet
Prices were narrow in the bond market today, though changes appeared slightly to favor the advancing side as the last hour of the short session got under way.

Many issues were unchanged and a number of leaders had failed to appear on the tape at all.

U. S. Governments were neglected in the listed market, but the taxable 2 1/4's and 2 1/2's edged up in over-counter dealings.

Panama stamped 3/4's of '94 were active in the foreign dollar loan division, at a small loss. Most others were about steady.

American & Foreign Power 5s inched upward in considerable volume in the corporate list. Others unchanged or a little ahead included Atlantic Coast Line 4 1/2's, International Telephone 5s, New York Central 5s, Northern Pacific 6s and New Haven Road 4 1/2's. Third Avenue adjustments were a little higher in active trade.

Commodity Prices Remain Unchanged In Week of Aug. 8

Special to The Christian Science Monitor—WASHINGTON Wholesale commodity prices were comparatively steady during the week ended Aug. 8, and the U. S. Department of Labor index remained unchanged for their period at 88.6 per cent of the 1926 level.

Average prices for commodities are now at exactly the same levels as in the week of April 25, just before the General Maximum Price Regulation was issued. They are 10 per cent higher than at this time last year.

The indexes for four of the 10 commodity groups declined during the week and one, building materials, advanced. In all cases the changes were less than one-half of one per cent.

Drive to Break Any Black Market In Steel Trading

CLEVELAND (AP)—OPA Attorneys said a suit filed here "only scratched the surface" of the nationwide drive to break a "black market" in steel, No. 1 war commodity.

Accusing steel operator Willard P. Markle of charging 68 per cent in excess of legal ceiling prices, the OPA attorneys obtained a temporary injunction against the temporary Houston, Texas, warehouseman. Their civil suit said he had bought 80 tons of steel and sold it to the New Orleans shipping interests of Andrew J. Higgins.

Federal Judge Robert N. Wilkin, who granted the temporary injunction, set Aug. 24 for a hearing on the Government's request for a permanent injunction restraining Mr. Markle from purchasing and reselling steel at rates higher than ceiling prices.

Mr. Markle told a reporter the steel he sold was fabricated material on which he knew of no ceiling prices.

"Those men are talking through their hats when they say I made 68 per cent profit," the 72-year-old defendant declared. "I sold at prices based on cost plus freight rates, allowing a small profit for myself. I am convinced I was helping out on defense."

Warner Brothers, Inc.
NEW YORK (AP)—Warner Brothers, Inc., subsidiaries reported for 30 weeks ended May 30 net profit of $3,311,878 after taxes and taxes of $1,225,000. This was a 100 per cent increase over the $3,311,878 net profit for the same period of the previous year. The company reported a net profit of $4,443,444 for the year ended May 30, 1941, after taxes of $1,225,000.

Ayres Sees Rail Traffic
Output Curb

CLEVELAND, Aug. 15 (AP)—Brig. Gen. Leonard P. Ayres declared today "railroad traffic, and not scarce materials, or fabricating capacity, or industrial manpower, will be the limiting factor which will restrict the expansion of our production of munitions."

The Cleveland economist, who retired last month as chief of the Army's statistical branch, added: "The reason is that the demands made on the railroads to carry freight are steadily and rapidly rising, while their capacity to do the carrying cannot be much further increased. With carrying ability restricted, and demands steadily increasing, the limits of capacity will in time be reached, and that time is not far off."

General Ayres, a vice-president of Cleveland Trust Co., noted in the bank's monthly business bulletin that "the volume of freight had nearly doubled since the war began" in 1919 and continued: "It might naturally be supposed that the limiting factor in the munitions part of our war program would be shortages of materials, and the importance of these factors is emphasized just now by the widespread reports that we cannot produce enough steel to meet our war needs. These assumed material shortages are more nearly the products of miscalculation and misallocation than they are of actual lack of sufficient materials. After all we produce far more steel than Germany and Japan and Russia and England combined."

"Our railroads are doing an outstandingly good job of wartime transportation. Probably they can just about succeed in carrying the peak volumes of autumn freight in September and October without any serious car shortages. Nevertheless, it ought not to be assumed that they can indefinitely continue to transport volumes of freight that increase steadily and unceasingly from month to month. The limits of their capacity have been nearly reached, and when they are reached the volume of our industrial output will have to level off no matter what other forms of transportation may be called into service, and no matter how large the war appropriations may be."

Canada Adjusts
Railroad Fares

OTTAWA, Aug. 13 (CP)—Munitions Minister C. D. Howe announced elimination of certain reduced fares on Canada's railroads, and warned that unless necessary civilian travel is limited on a voluntary basis "further restrictions may become necessary."

Effective at midnight, Aug. 31, the following are prohibited:

1. Reduced fares on trips between eastern and western Canada.
2. Reduced fares between the prairies and the Pacific Coast.
3. Special fares for convention groups.

"After Aug. 31, all such travel will be carried at ordinary fares," said Mr. Howe, who issued his statement as Acting Minister of Transport.

Arms Production Seen
Needing Civilian Boss

WASHINGTON (AP)—Reasserting that the nation faced a crisis in its war effort, Chairman Tolson (D-California) of the House Committee on Defense Migration declared that the arms production program needed a civilian boss "who does not have to be afraid of anybody."

Mr. Tolson said Donald M. Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board, had been given broad powers by President Roosevelt to get needed tools of war built, but that he had given most of this power to the Army and Navy.

He recited reports of shortages of vital materials and showings of war plants and declared that the threatened America's present military positions abroad.

Hobby Organizations

By Irving Baechus

Is your hobby organized? Many hobbyists enjoy wider friendships and cultivate a finer appreciation of their diversions because of participation in scores of clubs devoted to a variety of hobbies.

Such clans enable hobbyists to exchange information, locate references and learn "what the others are doing." The busy hands establish standards, protect and promote the recreational ideals they cherish, and labor industriously that the public may develop a better understanding of their activities. Why not organize a hobby club in your community?

The master organizations are playing a prominent role in the war. Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson has paid specific compliment to the work of the Amateur Radio Relay League. Virtually the entire membership of this organization is serving the war effort one way or another.

Victory Hobbies

A hobbies-for-victory campaign is being sponsored by the Hobby Guild of America.

"Our initial venture is based on selling items from collections and handiwork contributed by hobbyists," Guild Director Albert O. Bassuk explains. "Proceeds of the sales go to various war relief agencies." A New York department store has created a hobbies-for-victory corner to promote the campaign.

Many famous hobbyists have already forwarded items. With 50,000,000 hobbyists in the United States this and similar campaigns can make a sizeable contribution to Uncle Sam's war needs. More information on the hobbies-for-victory campaign may be obtained at headquarters, 34 West 33rd Street, New York.

Whatever be your preferences in philately, there is a specialty club boosting the item. To name several: Souvenir Issues Association, Air Mail Society, Bureau Issues Association, Christmas Seal and Charity Stamp Society, U. S. Envelope Society and many others.

Print Collectors, Etc.

For print collectors there is a Friends of Contemporary Prints group and circus hobbyists are divided among The Circus Fans Association of America, the Circus Historical Society for collectors and the Circus Model Builders and Owners Association.

There are two national doll clubs, a clock club, wedgwood club, ship model society, Early American Glass Club, and a McGuffey federation. The model hobbies are promoted by the Model Academy of Aeronautics, the National Model Railroad Association, the Model Yacht Association, the American Miniature Racing Car Association, and others.

America's favorite flowers are the subjects of special societies and all participating sports are promoted by organized groups. Pigeons, canaries, cats, dogs, and other pets have enlisted followings and the Avicultural Society of America is devoted to unusual birds.

Postcard collectors, movie makers, Mark Twain fans, photographers, match flap fanciers, contesters, soaring fans, and coin collectors are among the multitudinous organizations devoted to pastime pursuits.

Why not organize a hobby club in your city? If you are interested in obtaining the address of some organization promoting your hobby send self-addressed stamped envelope to ROBERT ROBBING, care of The Christian Science Monitor.

"Some walk up those 12 flights," he panted.

"But why didn't you take the elevator?" asked the attorney.

"I meant to," replied the client, "but I missed it!"—Great Northern Goat.

'A Fish Story

According to E. S., Sanibel, Fla., the following is a true incident which happened last month on Sanibel Island, a tropical island off the southwest coast of Florida in the Gulf of Mexico. Fort Myers is the nearest town of any size.

Two soldiers stationed at Fort Myers had rowed the three miles across San Carlos Bay from the mainland and landed at the eastern tip of the island, where there is a lighthouse. They were planning to fish off the lighthouse dock. However, a guard came out and told them it was Government property and they were not allowed to fish. The soldiers said they were in the Government service and should be permitted to fish there. The guard differed. A lively argument ensued. It was then that a 60-pound kingfish leaped into the boat. Guard and soldiers forgot the argument and joined forces to get the fish. They succeeded. So the soldiers got their fish and took the evidence of a good story back to camp.

Theater Reunion

London

A Birmingham woman stood outside a local theater one afternoon and watched some fifteen hundred recruits of a Guards regiment march into the theater to a special matinee. Two groups had already gone in when one of the members of the company spoke to her, and learned that she had made a special trip from Birmingham in the hope of seeing her son, who was in the regiment, but had not yet arrived.

Through this information a Grenadier Guards officer became interested, and asked for her son's regimental number. When he arrived, the boy was called out to speak to his mother, and then the theater's company and the military authorities agreed that the mother should join the theater group. So in the end she sat beside her son—the only woman in the packed audience.

The Battle of The Skies

The current demand for a second front calls for a new front in thinking. The human mind seems inherently reluctant to accept or even consider daring new attacks on old problems, but a radical strategy may be necessary for radical results. This is total war—war against timidity as well as brutality, against the negatively right as well as the positively wrong. We cannot entrench ourselves in defensive positions of thought.

Such daringly air-minded thinkers as Major de Seversky have long contended that the only possible new front against the Axis is the air-ocean. A recent book by William B. Ziff entitled "The Coming Battle of Germany" underlines this thesis, urging with considerable brilliance the case for a vastly increased air-transport fleet and the sort of aggressive long-distance air-fleet capable of striking a series of knockout blows at the heart of enemy production and communications. The coming Battle of Germany, according to this, will be a Battle of the Skies.

The testimony of experts before the Truman Committee has shown that the difficulties in the way of the building program which would be required by any such plan are enormous. But they are not necessarily insuperable. Mr. Ziff's attack on the problem calls to mind the criticism leveled by Major de Seversky at what he conceives to be the present Allied plan in the Pacific:

The plan apparently is to retrieve lost ground in the Pacific, mile by mile—to reconquer every island and every base that may have been seized by the enemy. . . . I submit that it makes no sense. The sooner we supplement this strategy by preparing for direct aerial assault on the heart of the enemy the better.

It is interesting to compare this statement with one made by Emerson over a century ago:

At present man applies to nature but half his force. . . . His relation to nature, his power over it, is through the understanding [by which he means the human intellect] as by manure; the economic use of fire, wind, water, and the miner's needle; steam, coal, chemical agriculture; the repairs of the human body by the dentist and the surgeon. This is such a resumption of power as if a banished king should buy his territories inch by inch, instead of vaulting at once into his throne.

Of course, the spiritual implications of Emerson's statement go far beyond any material "victory through air-power"; they point to a method of warfare which is essentially that of the Master Christian. But emancipation of the human mind in any degree from that acceptance of limitations which keeps it crawling forward inch by inch, mile by mile, can be expected to bring radically encouraging results.

Law in Suspense

"Of great importance to the public is the preservation of personal liberty, for once it were left in the power of any, the highest, magistrate to imprison arbitrarily whomever he, or his officers thought proper . . . there would soon be an end of all other rights and immunities."

These words, written by Blackstone, one of Britain's greatest lawyers, 168 years ago, were recently quoted in the House of Commons debate on the regulation (18b), under which it is possible for persons who in the opinion of the Home Secretary are a possible source of danger, to be imprisoned indefinitely without trial.

The fact is that Parliament is rightly concerned about the application of this regulation. For the principle embodied in the Habeas Corpus Act, that no accused person may be kept in confinement without being brought to trial, is the cornerstone of democratic liberties. In view of the care taken in the United States to insure a fair trial for eight Nazi saboteurs, the debate in the Commons is of international interest.

Yet the need for Britain's regulation 18b is plain. Britain is not only at war, but in imminent peril of invasion. In these circumstances it is necessary that the Government have power to arrest any person on suspicion of aiding the enemy and to retain him under arrest.

The Home Secretary, in his answer, satisfied the House that his administration was being carried out with a scrupulous sense of responsibility, and he maintained that any Minister who tried to administer regulations of this kind for partisan purposes would soon find himself in trouble. Parliament, which in the long run is necessarily the watch-dog of Great Britain's civil liberties, accepted the Home Secretary's presentation of his case, and confirmed its acceptance with a substantial vote.

A Battle Well Begun

Further reports of progress in the tactical offensive against the Japanese in the Solomon Islands will inspire new appreciation among Americans for the way United Nations forces are carrying out this task.

The battle, while being fought in a relatively restricted area, had to be conceived in wide-range terms. The United States Navy had to be prepared to keep supplies flowing to the men at the center of the fight, while air support for the main action had either to be flown from points 700 and 950 miles away or to come from naval planes launched at sea. The Japanese on the other hand are reported to have land-based planes on the three islands now under attack and are believed to have several other bases in the Solomons though their main base, of course, is at Rabaul, 700 miles distant.

The first round of the battle for the Solomons thus reflects great credit on our forces, and specifically on their ability to overcome in this instance the usual advantage of land-based air-power over sea-borne planes. This can only have grown out of a well-thought-out plan swiftly and enthusiastically executed by courageous men.

The battle is far from over, but it is well begun.

Right Into Your Home

Wages are higher than ever before; jobs are to be had for the asking. So writes a soldier in an adjoining column. Yet it isn't that alone that worries the private; he says:

Since Pearl Harbor the soldiers and sailors have one aim only—defeating our country's enemies. We believe that our task would be much easier if all on the home front would share this feeling.

At the same time our correspondent enclosed eight or ten clippings, all from one day's paper, and asked: "Is this total war?" Most of them were accounts of strikes; others were stories of racial discrimination or soaring farm prices—showing that the home front was not fighting a total war. It was a bad mirror to the day.

A Sun Oil advertisement in this newspaper highlighted the problem when it pictured a torpedoed tanker blazing in the sea. "The torpedo that did this blasted its way right into your home," said the advertisement, and:

Our Government has told us that this is total war in which defeat means total destruction. Our war industries must have the petroleum they require to carry on. Therefore it becomes the solemn and personal duty of every civilian to do his part in conserving gasoline. Rationing alone is not the answer.

The copy writer was right: "Rationing alone is not the answer"—for a free people. Here is a people who can give and give and give, intelligently and willingly, confident that this is a people's war in which there is no choice. We should like to reassure the private that the home front is sharing now and will increasingly support the war effort. May we?

Aiding the Serbs

Is the United States doing all it might do, and certainly should do, to forward the cause of General Mihailovich and his valiant Serbs?

This timely question arises from the acute need for guns and ammunition wherewith to continue what stands, to date, as the United Nations' nearest approach to a second front. Only a trickle of matériel is now believed to be reaching the warriors credited with tying up twenty Axis divisions.

Ruth Mitchell, sister of the late Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, herself a former liaison officer for the Chetniks, asks in a letter to the New York Herald Tribune, whether the initiative of the Russians in delivering such goods is greater than that of the Americans.

The answer to the problem of delivery, of course, is to be found, rather immutably, in geography. Some important steps will have to be taken before Lend-Lease cargoes start flowing in volume to the Serbs.

Miss Mitchell, whose return from Yugoslavia was interrupted by Gestapo retention in several German prisons, also pleads that the American Red Cross undertake the feeding of Serb prisoners. She points out that American and British prisoners receive weekly rations from the Red Cross. The Serbs do not, so the Germans line them up to watch the distribution, commenting all the while on how poorly the Allies take care of the Serbs. The problem, of course, is transportation.

The choice at this time must be made between the goods America would like to send and the goods it must send. The choice between butter and guns is hard but the Serbs have shown that they know how to choose.

Our Readers Say—

Great Singer—Great Song

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR: Your story, "The Philippines Speak," by Walter Robb, which described Mme. Schumann-Heink's concert in Manila, when she sang every verse of "The Star-Spangled Banner," reminds me of a story she told a music critic I know.

It happened during the World War One. Those were difficult days for her, because she was German. Some people made much of the fact that she had sons in the German army, forgetting that she had sons on both sides. But she took the entire United States Army to her heart, giving her time generously to singing in training camps.

During those days, as now, all concerts began with the singing or playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner." Few know all the words. For the German tongue of Schumann-Heink the anthem was insurmountable. One day her press agent suggested that, since her English accent was so poor she might just sing the alphabet. Nobody would know the difference. Couldn't she just do the German alphabet?

This went fairly well until one morning in a Los Angeles paper the music critic, after paying appropriate compliments to her concert of the night before, added to his review, "I would like to know one thing. In what language did Madame Schumann-Heink sing our national anthem?"

It was obvious that the time had come when she must really learn the anthem. She was then on her way to some of the training camps in the Southwest. At one of them she asked if someone could help her, and a young lieutenant offered aid. For three laborious weeks he drilled her until she could sing it, all of it. So that when that Manila audience heard her sing all verses of "The Star-Spangled Banner," it was a greater accomplishment than they knew.

"Conversation With a Sailor"

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR: Your editorial titled "Conversation With a Sailor" was read with a great deal of interest because it so accurately portrays the feelings of so many of the men in the service. You know, a service man learns just as much from chance contacts with civilians as they learn from him.

I have been in the East, South, and Northwest since Pearl Harbor and in each section found civilian war morale at a low ebb.

It seems to the writer that to average civilians this war is one of the best things that has happened to them. Wages are higher than ever before; jobs are to be had for the asking; and except for minor items and in a few sections, they are living better than ever before.

It is true that they all have relatives or friends in the armed service, but generally no ill has befallen them, and the idea of costly campaigns seems far removed. The thought of losing the war unless we can all pool our full efforts for victory does not enter their heads; and our inability to prevent submarine sinkings off our East Coast and our inability to stop the Japs from establishing bases in Alaska does not seem to affect their customary way of living.

Last summer there was much discussion of morale in the army, but since Pearl Harbor the soldiers and sailors have one aim only—defeating our country's enemies. We believe that our task would be much easier if all on the home front would share this feeling.

We Find New Friends

By Frank L. Perrin

Every cloud, according to the text in the old-time Spencerian copy book, has a silver lining. The visible proof of this is not always apparent or easily discernible. Back East, as our Western neighbors refer to the sector of the broad domain now subjected to more or less arbitrarily imposed wartime regulations, there persists an unwelcome and arduous rule which has upset what was regarded as an established system of independent transportation. Not only the rich, the affluent, rode in chaises. Even the less forehanded did not walk to and from their work. The laundress, the gardener, and sometimes the solicitor for more or less worthy charities parked their modest cars at the side entrance.

But now, almost automatically, all this is changed. The suburban trains have been lengthened and their number increased in some instances to provide space for good-natured and patient commuters. The bus service, somewhat carelessly appreciated a few months ago, has come to be recognized as a substantial asset. Many of us have discovered how considerate and courteous the capable pilots of these vehicles really are. We walk a dozen city blocks to hail a bus driven by a young man who was a stranger to us yesterday.

But these values are more or less inconsequential when compared to those which promise permanence and continuing benefits. We are all discovering new friends on the way to the railway stations and the staggered bus stops, and others we chance to talk with along the road to the city. They, and we also, in the days when there was plenty of gasoline and tires, traveled in state, thinking little of those we met or passed. Our neighbors were strangers. Necessity has made us fellow travelers and willing observers of those necessities imposed by enlistment in a common cause.

Many of us, confident in the inherited or proclaimed philosophies of life, have accepted as final and conclusive the theory that "it takes all kinds of people to make a world." Accepting this at its face value, we have endorsed and underwritten the declaration that regional prejudices and proclivities, rather than racial or nationalistic influences, determine the trends and shape the decisions of voters, educators, industrial leaders, and, finally, the body politic.

Thus it has not been at all difficult for agitators whose desire and profit it has been

"Advance Installment Buying"

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

Your editorial, "Advance Installment Buying," inspires me to acquaint you with the plan evolved by Willard C. Wheeler and Dr. Robert J. McFall and adopted by the American Marketing Association at its recent meeting at Ann Arbor, Mich. That plan included these important features:

(A) The issuing of a new type of war savings bond, probably "Victory Merchandise Bond," to take up the present excess income of the public which is clamoring to be spent, but with fewer goods to buy. The funds in these bonds would be available to the Government at once, but the bonds will be used as cash at the end of the war to pay for needed consumer goods and set the wheels of industry humming on peacetime work. This would mean many billions of dollars "pre-spent" for autos, refrigerators, and home equipment. The factories of the nation could with confidence revert to peacetime production and know that they and their dealers had a solid market waiting for them, fully and soundly financed. It would mean building for postwar prosperity rather than depression.

(B) The siphoning off of excess spending capacity where and to the extent it exists in each county by putting the sale of bonds on a systematic county sales quota basis and marshaling the "servicing" forces of the country for the purpose of reaching the quotas.

(C) "Victory Merchandise Bonds" would be offered at a slightly lesser interest basis, thus creating a differential between the ordinary and the merchandise bonds. They would be redeemable serially after the war is ended and as fast as consumer goods become available. At that time purchasers would merely present bonds in lieu of cash, and when passed back to the manufacturer through the distributive channels would be redeemable by the United States Treasury.

(D) The merchandise bonds would be made acceptable as collaterals up to 80 per cent of their then present value at all banks upon the simple showing of need for cash. By their serial numbers, the bonds would give relative priority to their holders for purchases after the war. This is a powerful sales appeal.

(E) The plan would give sales and service people the opportunity to sell war bonds by selling the type of merchandise with which they are familiar rather than a financial investment. It would give advertising people the opportunity to conduct national and local advertising campaigns, urging the people to buy merchandise bonds so that they would be the first in line to receive durable goods when they are again produced.

For example: Mrs. Housewife has repairs made to her vacuum cleaner. The service man explains that the repairs will enable her to continue using the machine, but that she will require a new cleaner when they again are available. The service man recommends the buying now of merchandise bonds approximately equivalent to the price of a new machine, so that the housewife will have a priority on a new vacuum cleaner when they are being produced. The housewife has a bond which gives her a priority and which will be accepted as cash for the brand of cleaner designated or for any other make she may select, or she has the option of using her bond priority for other merchandise—a radio, a range, or anything else she may need. If, when the goods are available, she prefers cash, her bond is redeemable at maturity at its face value plus interest. The housewife has priority on a vacuum cleaner or other durable goods; the Government has the use of the money; the vacuum service man has helped the Government by making the sale of a war bond; and an amount has been added to the backlog of orders for durable goods when the war has ended, which means factory production and continuous employment.

The Dust Bowl Grows Green

By Haydn S. Pearson

Six years ago this summer black soil dust was settling in Eastern cities. The papers carried headlines describing widespread and devastating dust storms. High air currents carried soil particles from the Dust Bowl—the area of the Five Corners, where Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas come together—to the streets and homes of the nation's capital.

The Dust Bowl, dramatized to the nation by newspaper articles, magazines, books, and an excellent motion picture, was one of the tragedies of World War One. Some 40,000,000 acres that had never been plowed were turned over and planted to wheat. Government officials estimate that 30,000,000 acres of this total were in the Great Plains region. The slogan was "Plow to the Fence for National Defense." The result was drought, exodus, and suffering.

In the last six years a conservation miracle has been wrought. Quietly, efficiently, and with a long-term plan for foundation, the farm families, working with soil experts of the United States Department of Agriculture, have changed the Dust Bowl to a region of stable farm homes.

The Wheeler-Case program, which provides $500,000 annually for the project, has served as the cornerstone. This program has involved four Government agencies, which worked in close co-operation: the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior has charge of dam construction and pumping stations; the Public Works Administration and the Civilian Conservation Corps have contributed labor and material. The Department of Agriculture is working through three of its agencies: the Soil Conservation Service, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, and the Farm Security Administration.

Four high lights stand out in the restoration of this great area: First, the type of farming has been changed from one-crop grain production to grassland farming, with the emphasis on a diversified program and meat production the chief cash crop. Today farm families are raising most of their own food and the feed for their livestock. It means gardens, dairy and poultry products for home use, canned fruits and vegetables for winter. It is a sensible type of modified subsistence farming, with a dependable cash product. This is, in itself, a major change in the farm philosophy of a large region.

Second, water has been brought to the Dust Bowl by a comprehensive, well-organized plan. Dams, ponds, and reservoirs have been constructed, together with a system of canals, main ditches, and side laterals. The soil of the Bowl is a fine, powdery type of loam that is generously fertile when supplied with water. It needs to be tied down by grass roots! And that is the basis of the present plan. Where dams and reservoirs are impossible, artesian wells are sunk to tap the deep, underground stream, and windmills pump the water into storage locations. The important fact is that constructive planning has brought water to the farmers.

Third, the widespread growth of co-operatives during the past desperate years of survival teaches a lesson in group help. Since 1936, over 1,000 self-help organizations have started. These cover an amazing list, ranging from a large co-operative grazing association to a few families combining to purchase a tractor. The point is that co-operative effort has been a major factor in making a dust bowl green again.

Fourth, the restoration of this large area to productivity and a place in the national economy is an illustration of how national resources can be used to help in an emergency. The return of this regime to the credit side of the ledger is not going to cost taxpayers much.

At the height of the disaster, one in every six families, or approximately 65,000 men, women, and children, were given loans. Of the $27,000,000 loaned by the Farm Security Administration, $10,000,000 has already been repaid. Some $350,000 is lent for water development, usually on a co-operative basis; thus the risk to taxpayers' money is spread on a broad base. As the area gets into production, the chances are good that practically all families will repay their loans with interest.

It is quietly dramatic proof that men can remedy their own mistakes. The experience in this great grasslands region is added proof that the national problem of soil conservation can be solved.
